To the man whose fearless spirit has dominated every forward movement at Indiana University, we respectfully dedicate this Arbutus.

A Dream Realized

Thousands have worked and labored - and now, through tear-dimmed eyes of gracious thanks-giving, we see the crystall-ization of life-time hopes and aspirations.

In memory of those who fought-in mem ory of those who suffered,
we have builded great
monuments of stone
May the sacrifice they have made be reflected in these small works of our eager hands.

Introduction

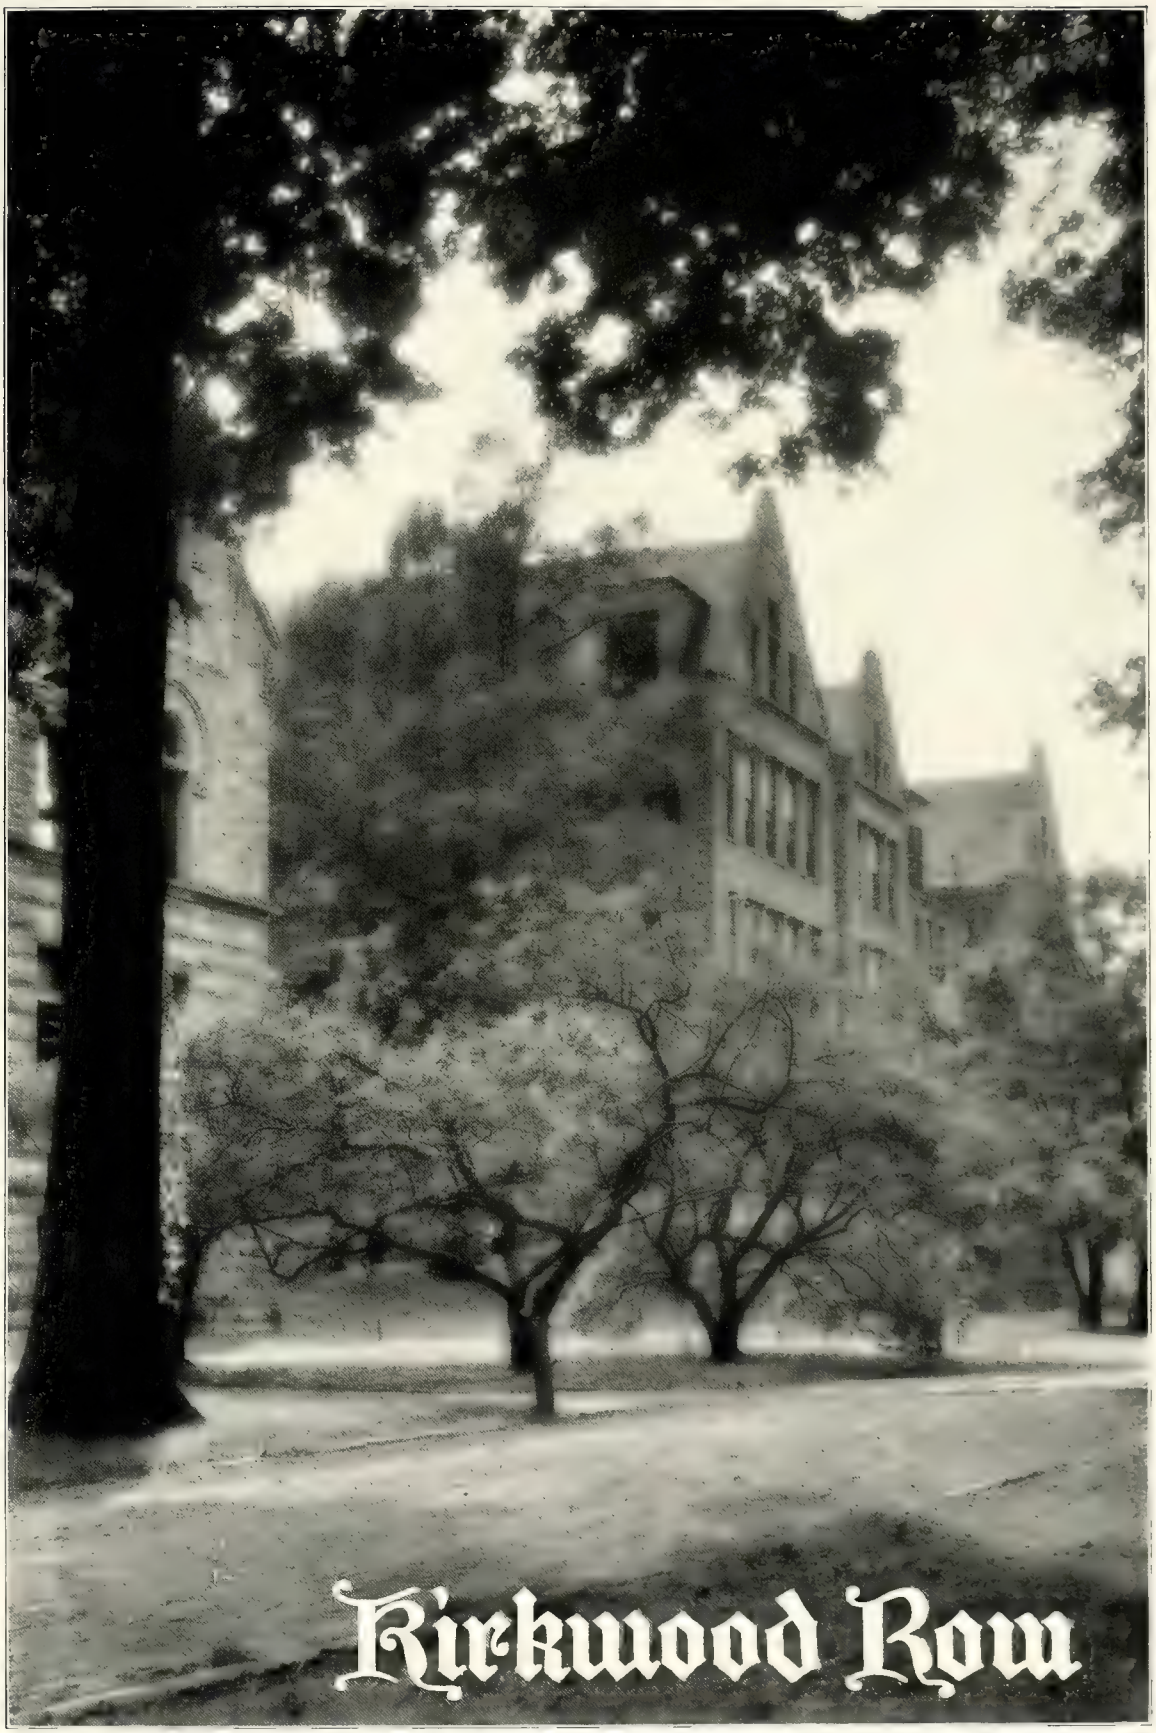

The campus, with its primeval beauty, invites the intellect to ponder and to reflect upon the nature of things-of values-of life. And, on going forth, a world accepts better men and women as a result of this God-like tutelage.

The Spirit of Indiana

Marker of Indiana University's first building

A work of this kind must express certain ideals which are the fundamental bases of the institution whose activity it is recording. There can be no doubt that the real spirit of Indiana University is the foundation for all permanent achievement, whether of character, of distinction, or of brick and stone. It is fitting, therefore, that this ARBUTUS of 1926, to the best of its ability, attempt to illustrate and to reveal the true spirit of Indiana University. This book is being compiled because its authors have had concrete proof that ideals have not been lost by modern college men and women. This proof has been an expression of true, loyal school spirit, delineated in a manner which should bring conviction to every educated man and woman. The ARBUTUS of this year cannot ignore the mighty spirit with which Indiana has been endowed.

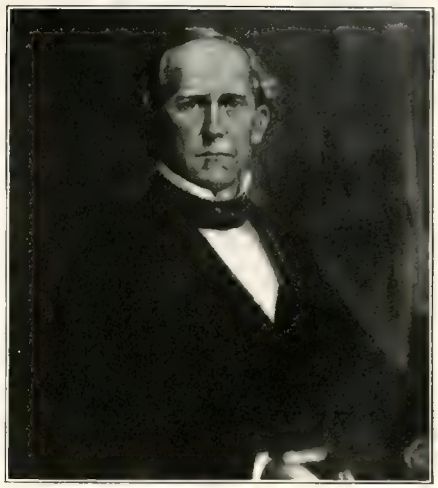

In order to know the necessity of appreciation of this spirit, it is necessary to understand what this spirit really is. The average undergraduate of any university rarely understands the motivating forces of the institution; the average alumnus does not know the source of his interest and effort for his "alma mater"; few of the faculty realize why they make sacrifices for the school of which they are a part. All are working toward a common end, but none stop to analyze the power which is driving them to that goal. Perhaps it is just as well that they do not see this, for the great impulse is so intangible that very few can lay their hands upon the pulse of the impelling force and state definitely that they have found the source of activity. But Indiana University has, within the past five years, laid this mighty spiritual engine bare; its workings are exposed to all those eyes which possess love and understanding. The SPIRIT OF INDIANA may now be defined.

The first building itself

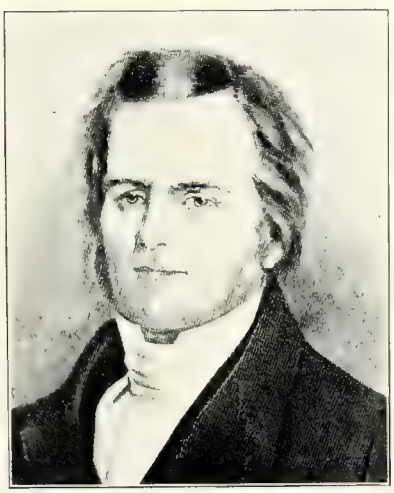

What is this spirit? Is it the spirit that impels a wild-eyed student body to scream, "Beat Purdue"? Is it the spirit that causes a group of serious-minded men and women to combat Philistinism upon the campus by founding magazines in which the vagaries of "Babbittry" are ridiculed?

Is it the spirit with which new buildings are paid for by the sacrifice of loyal students and alumni? These are but the ebullitions, some great and some very small, of this great force which is causing Indiana to advance to something entirely different. The true SPIRIT OF INDIANA is the spirit that causes the students and graduates of Indiana to be true to themselves and true members of the society in which they are placed. Indiana University is placing citizens of the state and of the nation in positions where they may benefit the individual and those people who are dependent upon that individual in that he is a necessary part in the action of the society to which he belongs. Soldier, statesman, scientist, educator, it matters not. The part is a minor thing; the action is the vital necessity. And has there been proof that the SPIRIT OF INDIANA has functioned in this manner? Let us turn the pages of her history and perceive the actions of her men and women. They will tell us of the manner in which the injunctions of the true SPIRIT have been carried out.

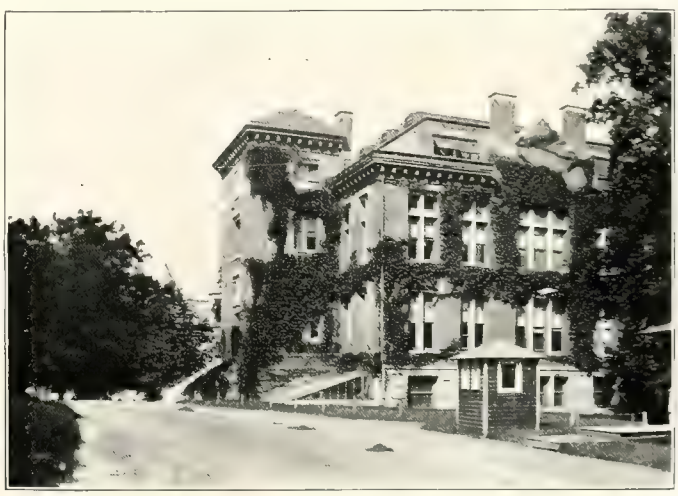

Joseph A. Wright
A graduate of the first class

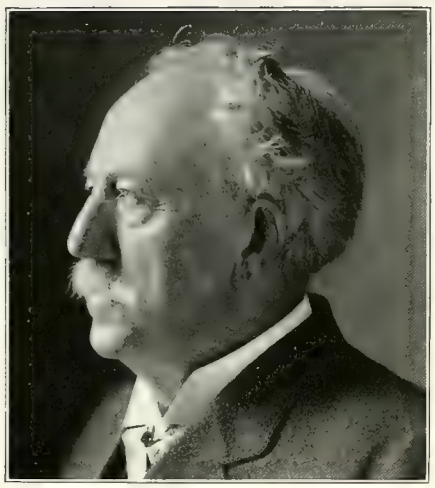

In the early pages of Indiana University's history, we find that classes in a very few subjects, taught by a very small faculty, in a diminutive building, were the sum total of the activities of the time. There was no frenzied shouting at football games; there was no daily paper; there was, ostensibly at least, no social organizations with their various pursuits. Yet, at that very time, when all seemed so quiet, when there was really no Indiana University, the SPIRIT OF INDIANA was operating. The first class left the small building in 1829; one of its members was Joseph A. Wright. It is not recorded with what honors he left the school, whether they were high or low; the average Indiana student of today knows not whether he was a shining student, a mediocre one, or a poor one. The people of the State of Indiana do know, however, that he served the state and the nation as an executive and as a statesman. We find that from the very start, humble and inauspicious as it might have been, men and women were unconsciously inspired by this mighty spirit to obey its unspoken commands.

To trace the growth of the University through the first hundred years belongs to another agency. It is our part to show the continuity and permanence of the products which were illustrated at the very start. The years passed on and, when the nation was plunged into civil strife that threatened its very existence, the students of Indiana University responded to the utmost of their ability. This, too, is a matter of history—history of which we, as her sons and daughters, may well be proud.

Alumni of '73 returned for commencement

But not all of her feats and achievements occurred on the field of battle or in diplomatic and political fields. We find that in everyday life, not only in this state nor even in this nation, thousands of men and women have been performing deeds worthy of remembrance which have never been recorded. There is no definite record of how many lives are due to the teaching of Indiana, of how much misery and poverty have been eradicated through her agency, nor of how many industrial and economic advances have been influenced by the foundations which she has laid. We do not know definitely to what an extent the beauties of the earth

Memorial Hall, part of the project

have been enhanced to her sons and daughters through the theories and facts which they have learned from the philosophies of life which they have studied within her walls. It matters not that we cannot measure these things. The only truth is that they have existed and that they do exist. The scoffers and sneerers cannot deny this fact.

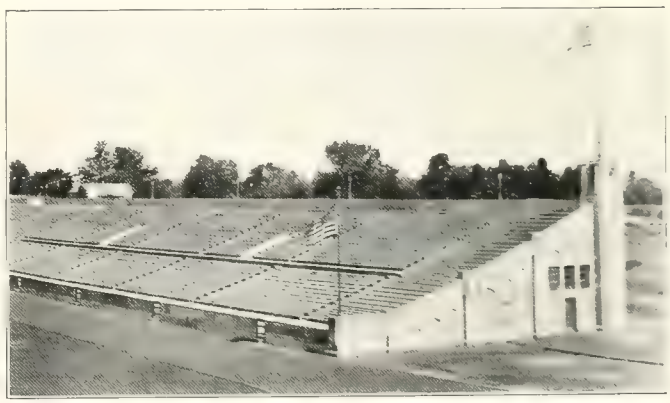

President W. L. Bryan

Now that we have defined this spirit, let us proceed to the proof of its existence. The proofs which have been offered during its definition were merely incidental, convincing as they might be to a person open to conviction. But within recent years, indisputable proof has been added. It is also well to point out to the undergraduate of today and the alumnus of tomorrow that many of the tangible things which he sees about him were not procured through absolute necessity.

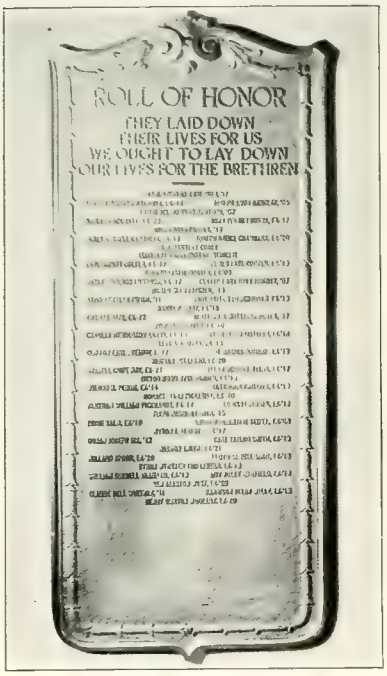

W. A. Alexander
Director of the campaigns

In 1917, when the nation took up arms against a foreign power in the greatest conflict of which she has ever been a participant, Indiana University immediately became a contributing factor to the military forces of the United States. Students rushed to volunteer for the defense of their nation's standard. They knew not if they should be able to pursue knowledge further; they could not foresee whether they should take the places in life for which they had prepared or whether they should not. They only knew that there was necessity for them in the ranks of the armed forces, and, despite the horrible contingencies of modern warfare, they did not hesitate in filling the places which were open, regardless of the danger to which they might be exposed. It is again a matter of history that they fulfilled their destiny on the field of battle well. No one who has read this enviable record can deny that the sons of Indiana who took part in the conflict did their respective parts in a creditable manner.

Another phase of Indiana's Memorial

Honored Dead

When these men returned, they went about their tasks in the University and the different phases of life outside its walls with a matter-of-fact disregard for that course which they had completed. For some time they contemplated the list of those who had not returned, and felt it fitting that some reminder of the noteworthy manner in which they had lost their lives be established. Thousands of suggestions poured in. At the very outset the ordinary means of memorial were rejected. It was felt that the most permanent and satisfactory monuments to the memory of these men should be means by which the real Indiana should progress and work toward the goal which she has always in mind. The final decision was reached. A girls' dormitory, a Union building and a stadium were to be erected as tangible proof of the gratitude of Indiana University for the actions of her sons who had expended their whole treasure of mind and body in fulfilling the ideals which the true SPIRIT OF INDIANA had indelibly fixed within them.

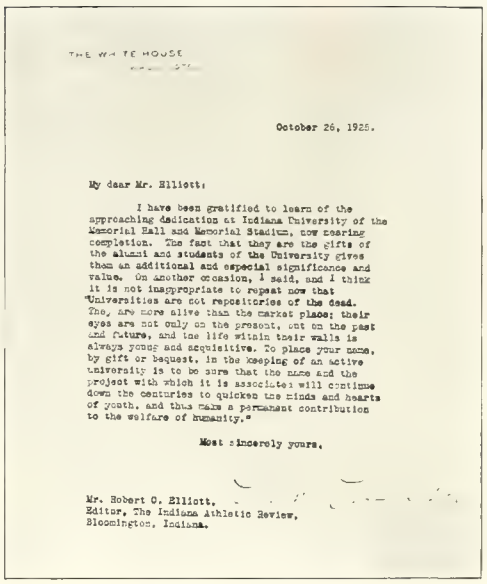

Recollections of the first drive

And now came the proof of this great SPIRIT. This proof cannot be measured by dollars and cents. It must be measured by the mental attitude with which the task was undertaken. No one, when the project was analyzed, denied that its purpose was not the right one. No one thought that tools for the real work of the school were inapropos for a memorial to an expression of the genuine SPIRIT of the school. Teams of workers went forth, it is true; we deny that they were for the purpose of soliciting. They explained to the younger members, it is true, what the memorial was and how it was to be financed, but the majority of the school needed no explanation. It was a spontaneous movement, and it met with spontaneous expression. The great numbers of alumni wrote in from all parts of the world, sending their contribution to swell the fund which was to erect this great memorial. When one views this expression, in which the class of 1926 had a great part, can one deny that ideals are existent among the men and women of Indiana University?

THE WHITE HOUSE

October 26, 1925.

My dear Mr. Elliott:

I have been gratified to learn of the approaching dedication at Indiana University of the Memorial Hall and Memorial Stadium, now nearing completion. The fact that they are the gifts of the alumni and students of the University gives them an additional and especial significance and value. On another occasion, I said, and I think it is not inappropriate to repeat now that "Universities are not repositories of the dead. They are more alive than the market place; their eyes are not only on the present, but on the past and future, and the life within their walls is always young and acquisitive. To place your name, by gift or bequest, in the keeping of an active university is to be sure that the name and the project with which it is associated will continue down the centuries to quicken the minds and hearts of youth, and thus make a permanent contribution to the welfare of humanity."

Most sincerely yours,

Mr. Robert C. Elliott,
Editor, The Indiana Athletic Review,
Bloomington, Indiana.

The Coolidge letter

For some time it seemed as if this goal was never to be reached. Physical obstacles intervened in seemingly endless order. Every impediment, however, aroused only determination to go on with greater endeavor, until this year we have seen the greater part of the memorial completed and in use. It is a fitting time, therefore, for the SPIRIT which has accomplished this visible proof of its existence to be appreciated and placed before the students, alumni, and friends of Indiana University.

Our beloved president, William Lowe Bryan, has said, "Indiana University does not consist of stone buildings, but of the men and women which constitute the school." We cannot but feel the truth of this assertion, and at the same time to interpret it in the same light.

INDIANA'S SPIRIT IS ETERNAL! Long after the present buildings have crumbled away, and the great-grandchildren of the students of today have passed into history, the SPIRIT OF INDIANA will survive! It is so mighty that mere words cannot express it. Indiana's sons and daughters will march forth into the life of the state and nation and perpetuate the work which has been so nobly performed in the past. Let us seek to be worthy bearers of the task which is so important to this splendid institution.

It is altogether fitting and right that the Arbutus of 1926 embody as its ideal

THE SPIRIT OF INDIANA

The aim of this year's drive

Alma Mater

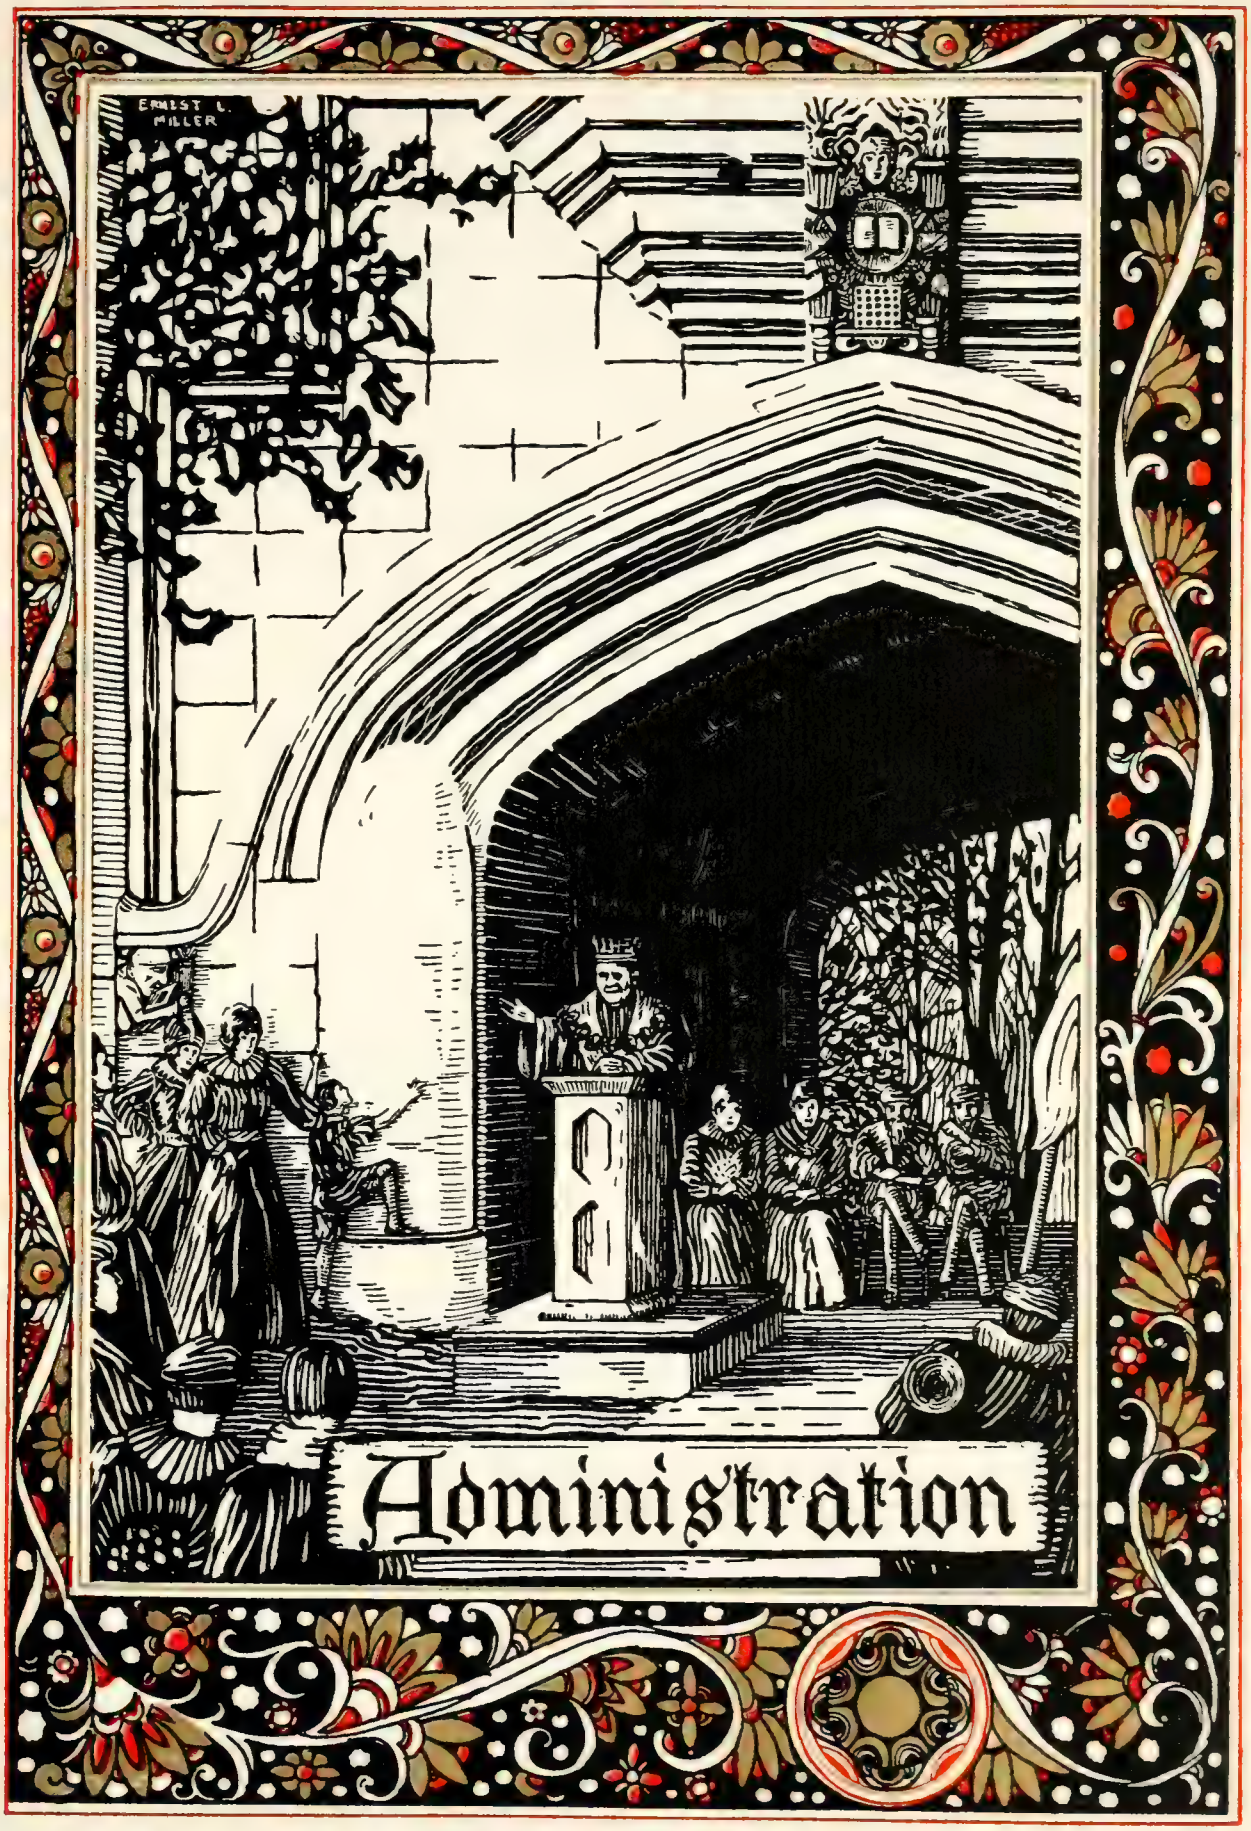

By

Edwin Howland Blashfield

Alma Mater appears as the central woman figure.

In her arms and at her feet are the books which represent the learning created and cherished by the University. At her feet is a dragon devouring the books. The dragon represents barbarism, the spirit which hates what is fine and loves what is base. The angels are helping as well as they can to save the books.

The youth who bears the shield of Indiana University stands ready, we hope, to fight for Alma Mater against the dragon.

WILLIAM LOWE BRYAN
President

Though I realize the importance of serving large numbers of the people in the University and the necessity of having a large income in order to render that service, it has never been my chief concern that Indiana University should have vast numbers or enormous resources or anything else that can be expressed in statistics. The statistics of the University for each year from 1830 to 1925 have their own weighty significance. Especially significant is the progressive development by the University of professional schools, since it is within the learned professions that the most and best of civilization survives and grows.

But the most important thing about any school of any sort, small or great, is its morale. Morale means quality. Morale means demand for fine things, hatred of base things. Morale means integrity, square dealing for everybody. Morale means a fair measure of harmony among free individuals, a maximum of freedom with a maximum of co-operation. In the measure that this ideal is realized, we have the Kingdom of God on earth.

It is this and not numbers and not money which has been and remains my supreme desire for my University.

James W. Fesler
President Board of Trustees

There has been no more loyal supporter of Indiana University during the past twenty-five years than James W. Fesler, president of the Board of Trustees. An outstanding lawyer of Indianapolis, Mr. Fesler has ever found time to devote energy to the furtherance of Indiana's traditions and ideals.

Board of Trustees

Although it receives no flamboyant publicity, the Board of Trustees is the element which keeps Indiana University functioning. The important decisions affecting the problems of the school are made by this board, which has the co-operation of President Bryan and the faculty. It bears the weight of the more important responsibilities of the School, one of the more recent decisions being the sanctioning of the purchase of the Indiana Dental College as a part of the University.

The Board of Trustees

Administrative Officials

Without an efficient system of administration, Indiana University would be in great difficulties when monetary and scholastic records were to be consulted. It is through this system that the affairs of the University are kept in order, and checks are made upon the students' records. It is through the staff of the administration that the University can accurately keep in touch with the students.

At registration time the offices in Maxwell are the busiest places on the campus, and the long queues of registrants give one an impression of the true size of the School. As registrar, John W. Cravens directs enrolment and classification, maintaining a large office in Maxwell Hall for these purposes. U. H. Smith, bursar, controls the finances of the University, handles student fees, and oversees the hundreds of details essential to the accurate administration of university accounts.

Samuel E. Smith
Vice-President Board of Trustees

In charge of Indiana's extramural activities, as provost, Dr. Smith has furthered the development of the Indianapolis branches. As vice-president of the Board of Trustees, he has been especially active in encouraging the growth of the Long and Riley Hospitals.

John W. Cravens
Registrar

A graduate of Indiana in 1897, John W. Cravens has been associated with the growth of Indiana University as its registrar since that time. He has held the positions of presidential elector, member of the State Legislature, and has been secretary of the University since 1915. At sixty-one, he is one of Indiana's grand young men.

U. H. Smith
Bursar

U. H. Smith, the Bursar of Indiana University, is one of the busiest men in the administration. He not only manages the financial affairs of the institution, but also teaches in the Commerce School. For a time Mr. Smith resided in Colorado, and later was assistant registrar here.

Dean C. E. Edmondson

No figure about the campus is better known, and few are more popular, than that of C. E. Edmondson, Dean of Men. He it is before whom recalcitrant students are haled for infringement of University rules. He is the official who regulates interclass activities, and on "Cap Night" welcomes the freshmen into full participation of University life.

Dean Charles J. Sembower

From material for big league baseball to the position of a dean in a great university seems a long step to some people, but it is true of Charles J. Sembower, Dean of Men. His continued interest in the major sports has long won for him the title of "the Godfather of Indiana Athletics."

Deans of Men

Probably the most upbraided men on the campus, and holding without a doubt the one job where there is no thankfulness, at least from those who have occasion to call on them, Deans C. E. Edmondson and Charles J. Sembower deal their decisions with perfect equanimity.

Holding forth in two of the smallest offices in Maxwell Hall, and keeping open house for wrongdoers during certain hours of the day, these men have a way of delving into misdemeanors in such a manner that, after a brief talk, one is convinced that hanging is too good a punishment, and one comes out a very chastened and repentant culprit.

The oracles of ancient Greece had little on these men, for there is little that escapes them in campus happenings. After once answering the summons of the white card, one marvels at the thoroughness of their work. Though often discussed in fireside sessions in expletives that have no place in parlor conversation, in reality they are human, and probably their work is just as distasteful to them as it proves to some of us.

Deans of Women

Any question pertaining to girls or their activities is speedily settled by Dean Agnes E. Wells and her efficient assistant, Mrs. Grace Philputt Young. The important matter of dances or parties, proper filing of chaperons—all this is handled expeditely through this office.

All matters that are taken to the Dean of Women are carefully filed in the University archives, and at any later time it is a very simple matter for the affair in question to be settled quickly.

Judging from the number of girls who daily seek the office on the first floor of Maxwell Hall, we imagine that transgressors are numerous. The smoking question which has created such a furore on other campuses has not ruffled the calm waves of the Indiana campus; the much discussed question of petting parties which has created sensational discussion throughout the land—these and other difficult matters have never interrupted the tranquillity of Indiana.

Due to the careful handling of her charges, the so-called weaker sex, few cases are known where anything not in keeping with the well regulated woman's life are noticeable.

Dean Agnes E. Wells

Miss Agnes E. Wells, Dean of Women and lecturer in mathematics, received her A. B. degree from the University of Michigan in 1903. She received an A. M. degree from Carleton College, where she taught mathematics, in 1916. She was Acting Dean of Women at the University of Michigan in the summer of 1917 and the year 1918. She received her Ph. D. degree from Michigan in 1924.

Dean Grace Philputt Young

Mrs. Grace Philputt Young, Assistant Dean of Women, has long been associated with the campus of Indiana University. A graduate of the University in the class of '08, she later studied in Europe. She has for a number of years been a professor in the Department of Romance Languages, teaching French. In her capacity as Assistant Dean of Women, she has ably assisted Miss Wells in her duties.

Wiley J. Huddle

As president of the Alumni Association, Wiley J. Huddle has been very active in graduate affairs since receiving his degree in 1901. Mr. Huddle has taught chemistry at the University of Wisconsin, and at present is a consulting engineer.

George Heighway

George Heighway returned to Indiana this year as Alumni Secretary, having graduated from here in 1922, taking an LL. B. degree. Prior to assuming his work here, Mr. Heighway was the manager of the insurance department of the Washington Bank and Trust Company, of Indianapolis. He is twenty-seven years old.

The Alumni Association

The Alumni Association is composed of all graduates and former students of Indiana University. It keeps in close contact with the school through the Alumni Council, which it elects "to consider and carry out all such programs of work as naturally concern the graduates of the University."

The Alumni Secretary is appointed to publish and distribute the Alumnus, a weekly news letter which reaches all alumni, no matter where they may be.

The Quarterly is a more complete publication, which deals with affairs in a more detailed way, and presents the problems and achievements in a comprehensive manner.

The Alumni Association has made it possible to maintain a close bond in which all graduates of the school are included. Not only does it see that events at the University are recorded, but it also definitely maintains an accurate directory of all former students and their activity. Graduates find that it is one of the most beneficial aspects of Indiana University.

Publicity Department

The publicity which emanates from Indiana University is handled by a well organized staff of experts under the direction of Frank Elliott, who publish the notable events of the University so that the state may see what its institution is doing. Were it not for their efforts, Indiana University might become almost monastic in its isolation.

This need of publicity has been felt more urgently in the past few years when Indiana grew so that her accomplishments were of interest to all portions of the state. This need has been adequately met by the organization which now functions under the head of "Publicity Department." Every paper of consequence receives items which are of interest to its readers. Not only do the alumni gain information concerning the University from this, but hundreds of other citizens see the use to which their taxes are put, and they see how worthwhile this use has been.

Frank R. Elliott

Frank R. Elliott is a graduate of Indiana University, who now tells the rest of the world about his alma mater. He received an A. B. degree in 1917 and an A. M. degree in 1925. He is the director of the publicity for the University. Also, he is part-time instructor in the Department of Journalism.

Ivy L. Chamness

Miss Ivy L. Chamness is editor of the University Publications, at which post she has served for some time. Catalogs, quarterlies, bulletins, pamphlets—all are edited and made up at the Publications Office. Miss Chamness has complete supervision of this work.

Dean S. E. Stout

Dr. S. E. Stout is Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences. Dean Stout graduated from Grand River College at Edinburg, Mo., in 1891 with a B. S. degree. In 1901 he received an A. B. degree from William Jewell College, at Liberty, Mo., and was professor of Latin in that school. In 1910, he received his Ph. D. degree from Princeton. He is the author of a Latin textbook and "The Governors of Molesia."

Arts and Sciences

The College of Arts and Sciences is the oldest school of Indiana University, and it may be called the origin of all schools. It reigned alone until the Law School was established, and it was the element which formed a foundation firm enough for the successful building of other departments and schools.

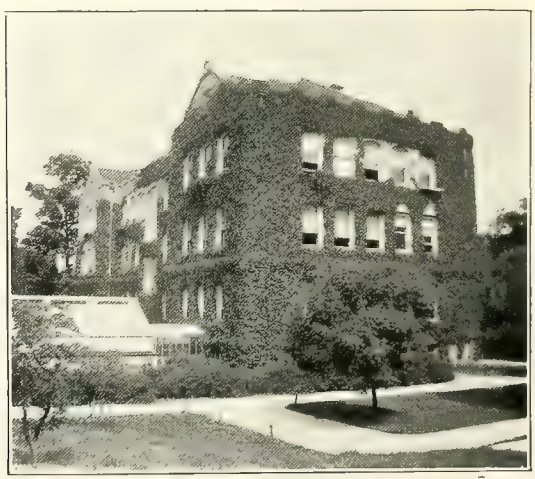

At Indiana, as elsewhere, the College of Arts and Sciences sees that the student receives the training by which he may live to the best advantage for himself and his community. It does not endeavor to instill in him vocational principles, but furnishes him with the cultural aspects, in whose light he may interpret the facts of life.

Included in the curriculum of the College of Arts and Sciences are the general required subjects, which furnish the elements for specialized training in the other schools.

Deans Selatie E. Stout and David A. Rothrock govern the activities of the College of Arts and Sciences, and they see that the student gets the utmost from this phase of the University.

Biology Hall

Graduate School

The Graduate School trains the student in the methods of studying the more intricate processes in the fields of science and literature. It shows the deeper and more specific sides of the course in which the student has specialized.

The first degrees for graduate work were conferred in 1881. Since then more students have enrolled and more degrees have been granted with increasing regularity. Formal and distinct organization did not come until 1904, and, in 1908, the office of Dean of this school was created.

To enter the Graduate School, a Bachelor of Arts or Science degree from Indiana, or equivalent degrees from other colleges is required. Dean C. H. Eigenmann, nationally known for his power of research, is the head of this department of the University.

The offices of the School are located on the top floor of Biology Hall. Graduate work is given in all departments of the University, and accredited by this School. Research work is especially fostered in the study in this department.

Dean C. H. Eigenmann

Dr. Eigenmann, Dean of the Graduate School, has been a member of the Indiana University faculty since his graduation in 1886. Known internationally as an authority on ichthyology, he is one of the best known figures on the campus. He received his A. M. and Ph. D. degrees from Indiana.

The Observatory

Dean H. L. Smith

Dr. H. L. Smith is Dean of the School of Education, director of Summer Session, and the author of several books on Education. He graduated from Indiana in 1898 with an A. B. degree, and received an A. M. degree in 1899. In 1910 he received a Ph. D. degree from Columbia. He has taught in the government schools in the Canal Zone, in the Bloomington schools, and in the schools of Minneapolis.

School of Education

In 1853, the General Assembly provided that the University should institute a normal school for instruction in the theory and practice of teaching, in order that teachers might be furnished for the common schools of the state. In compliance with this, the University established a department for training teachers in that year.

This department has grown until now it is asserted that it offers more courses than any other department on the campus. Due to its nature, the School of Education must and does receive the co-operation of nearly every department on the campus. Its courses include the study of psychology and teaching methods.

The School of Education grows more popular each year, and it is believed that it will be a great influence in eliminating the poor teaching that exists in the grade and secondary schools of the state. Practical work is obtained by supervised teaching in the schools of Bloomington and Bedford.

Dean H. L. Smith is the head of the school, and has done much to further its growth and efficiency.

School of Law

When Indiana College became Indiana University in 1838, the same act of legislation established a School of Law in the University. Despite a suspension from 1877 to 1889, its revival heralded a period of prosperity for it. The Law School is now one of the most important branches of the University. It shares the honors with the School of Medicine in being the most highly specialized school in the University.

At present the course leading to the LL. B. degree occupies three years, preceded by a two-year course in Arts work. Advanced studies leading to the J. D. degree are offered, and are being taken by several students in the school. Dean Paul V. McNutt has succeeded Dean Emeritus Charles M. Hepburn, who is now engaged in research work, as head of the school.

The library of the School of Law contains complete records of court decisions of all the states, the full English Reprint, and the more important digests and encyclopedias of law. Also, all Federal and Supreme Court decisions may be found on the open alcoves in the main reading room.

Dean P. V. McNutt

Paul V. McNutt was a prominent figure on Indiana's campus when he was an undergraduate. He later graduated from the Harvard Law School in 1916. He entered the army during the war and rose to the rank of colonel. He returned to Indiana as a member of the faculty, and was chosen Dean of the School of Law in 1925.

Dean Charles P. Emerson

Dr. Charles P. Emerson, a graduate of Amherst and Johns Hopkins Universities, is the Dean of the School of Medicine. Formerly connected with Johns Hopkins and Cornell Universities as a member of the faculty, he carries on the work of the School of Medicine in a most progressive manner.

School of Medicine

The School of Medicine has lately been brought into the eyes of the state and the nation by its astounding and rapid expansion. With divisions in both Bloomington and Indianapolis, the young doctors receive intensive training in study and clinical work. The School of Medicine was established in 1903, when the first two years of instruction was provided at Bloomington. In 1908 the Indiana Medical College was united with the Indiana University School of Medicine; this union marked an advance in the progress of the school.

The clinical work afforded at the Robert W. Long and James Whitcomb Riley Hospitals, which have been established by endowments, has given the School of Medicine prestige which has not been surpassed by any medical school in the nation.

Dr. Charles P. Emerson, Dean of the School, and Dr. Samuel E. Smith, Provost of the University, have been closely connected with the progress, while Dr. Burton D. Myers, Assistant Dean, has furthered the advance of the Bloomington department.

School of Commerce

The Commerce School is completing its fifth year in Indiana, assisting its students to gain ideas concerning the truths of business and finance. It occupies the newest academic building on the campus, and enjoys the distinction of being housed in one of the most beautiful structures in school.

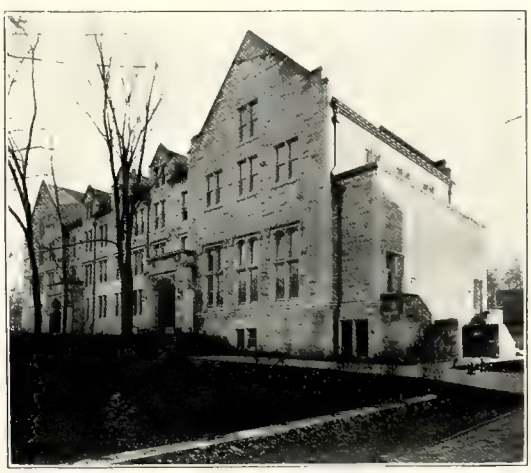

Indiana University is a pioneer in the establishment of training students for commercial work. In 1902, the first course was given, which covered two years. In 1919, the Board of Trustees authorized a four-year course, and in 1920 a separate School of Commerce and Finance was established.

Dean William A. Rawles has headed the school since its establishment, and its enrollment now runs a close second to that of the College of Arts and Sciences. The inception of the School of Commerce has widened the scope of the University, bringing many students here that previously graduated from schools outside the state. Not only does the school maintain a personal contact with the students enrolled therein, but it assists in securing for them positions upon completion of the work here at the University.

Dean William A. Rawles

Dr. William A. Rawles, Dean of the Commerce School, is a graduate of Indiana and Columbia Universities. A member of Indiana's faculty since 1894, Assistant Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences from 1908 to 1920, he was chosen Dean of the Commerce School with its inauguration. His most widely read work is Principles of Taxation.

Dean B. W. Merrill

Dr. B. W. Merrill, Dean of the School of Music, is a former student of both Joseph Joachim and Andreas Moser. Before coming to Indiana he was professor of music at the Iowa State Teachers' College, and formerly was director of music at the Academy of Music at Tacoma, Washington.

School of Music

The Indiana University School of Music held its first class in 1893. M. B. Griffith gave private lessons then, and he exacted no fees for his work, nor did the student receive University credit for the time spent. The school grew in numbers, and each year saw additions to the instructional staff. In 1919, B. W. Merrill was appointed head of the Department of Music. In 1921 the Trustees established the School of Music, and appointed Professor Merrill as Dean.

The School of Music has heartily co-operated with the remainder of the University by furnishing splendid advertising mediums in the form of orchestras, choirs and glee clubs. The individual members of the faculty have always assisted in all campus productions.

The School of Music is situated in Mitchell Hall and its Annex, both of which are near the other University buildings.

School of Dentistry

The Indiana Dental College, by action of the Trustees, became a department of Indiana University last year. It is situated at Indianapolis, and as a separate institution, had already asserted its importance in the dental world. Combined with the members of the Medical School, Indiana now has nearly a thousand students at Indianapolis.

The School of Dentistry is an old institution. Founded in 1879 in accordance with the state ruling concerning the practice of the profession, it was the tenth school to teach dentistry in America, and it has offered dental training for forty-seven years. It has over two thousand graduates.

It will remain in Indianapolis and co-operate with the Robert W. Long and James Whitcomb Riley Hospitals in offering training for its students. It is a valuable adjunct to Indiana University. Dr. Frederic R. Henshaw will continue as Dean of the School.

Frederic Rich Henshaw

Dr. Henshaw, Dean of the School of Dentistry, has long been associated with educational advancement in dentistry. The Secretary of the Indiana State Board of Dental Examiners from 1901 to 1914 and the author of many articles and papers on dentistry, Dr. Henshaw is well known in the dental world.

Robert E. Cavanaugh is the head of the Extension Division and directs its activities in the state. Mr. Cavanaugh's office is at the Indianapolis center of the Extension Division, on North Pennsylvania street.

Extension Division

Before the year 1912, the extension activities of the University were comparatively minor. There was no real department for extension. In that year the work was definitely given a place, and an Extension Division was established, with William A. Rawles as acting director. In 1914 a permanent director and staff were appointed to give their full time to the development of the work.

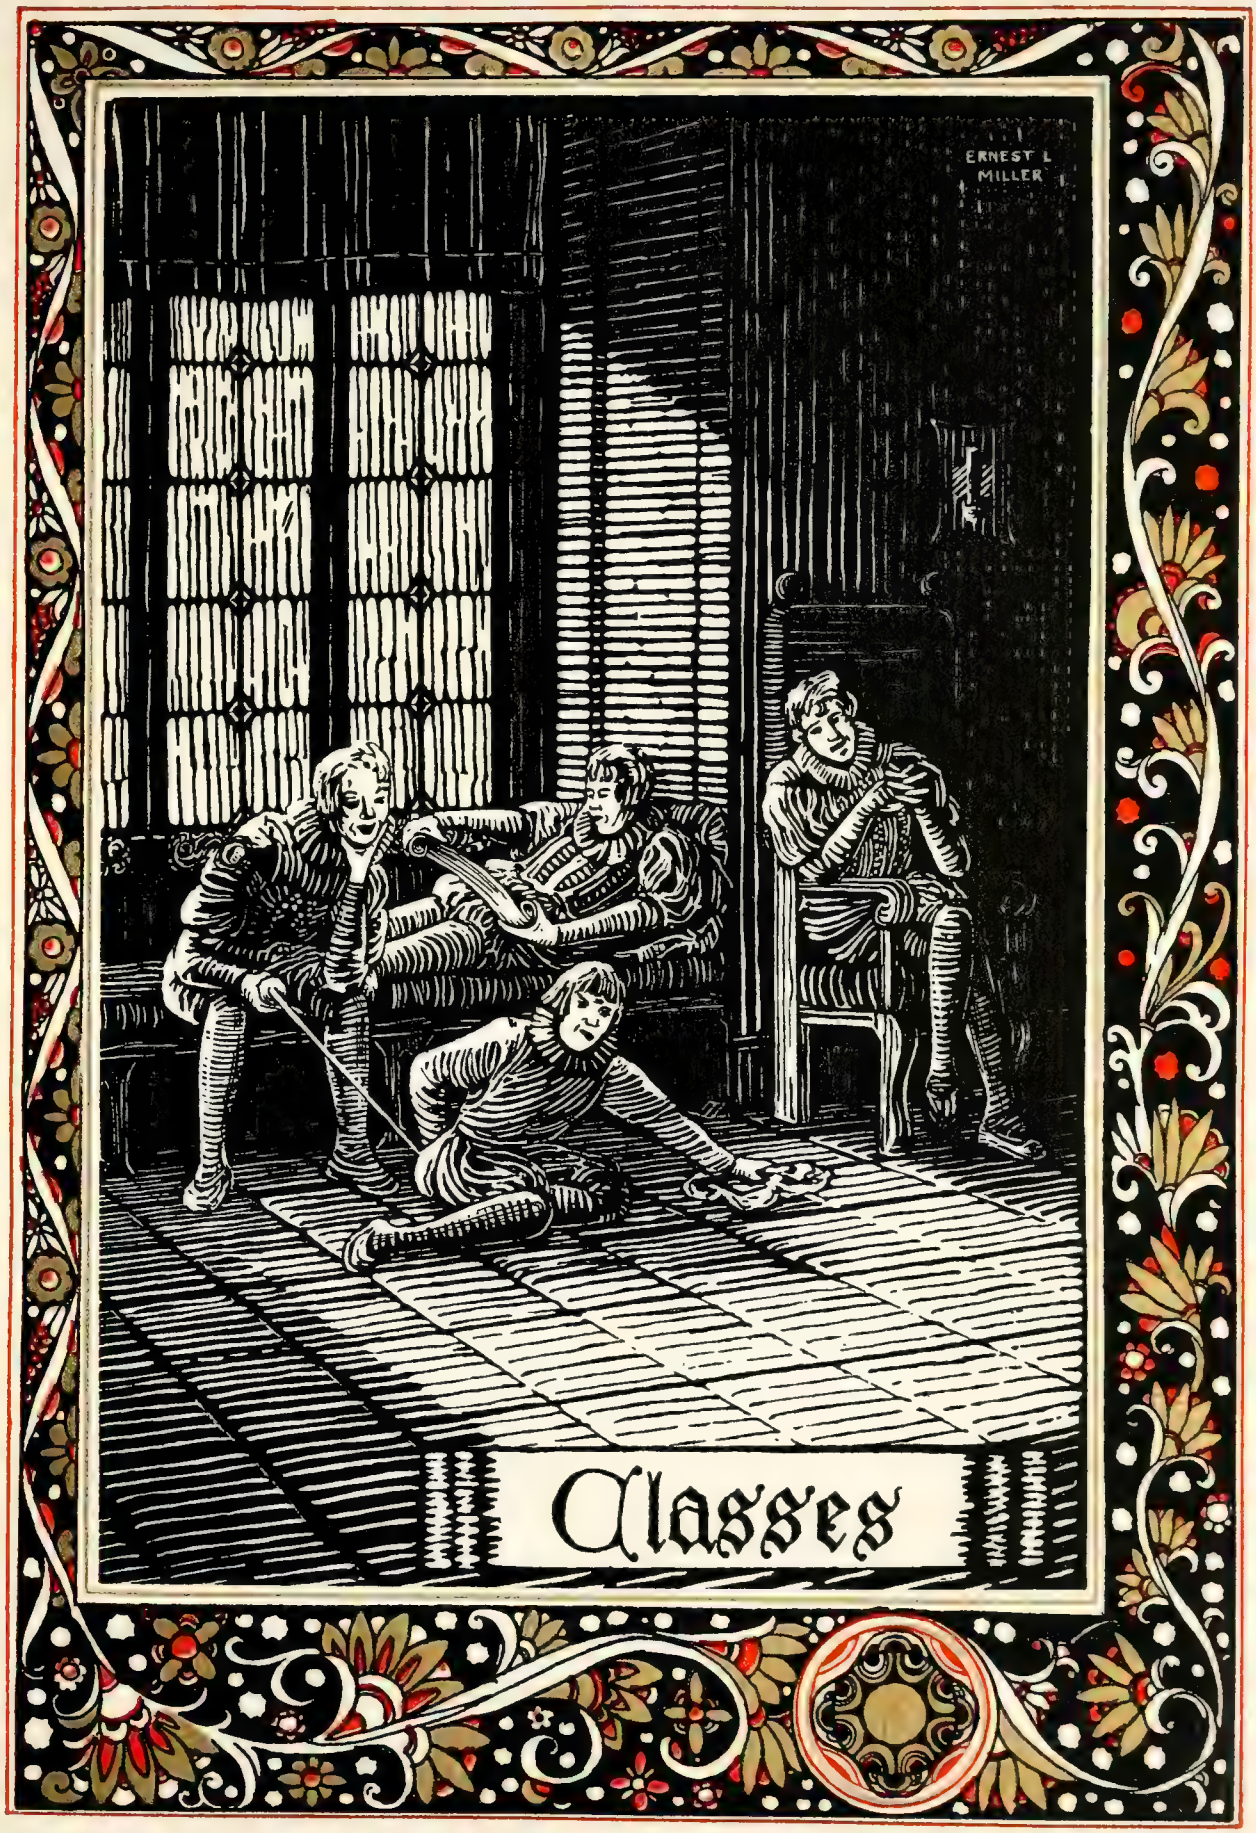

The object in view for extension work was to carry the University to those who were unable to attend the school, but who wished for work in various subjects given by the University. The work is one of public service, and the character of the instruction given is subject to the public demands. Research and a chance for investigation in technical subjects is made possible through this service. Also students who have been forced to withdraw for a semester or more have found this an excellent way to make up any number of lost hours which are requisites for graduation. Branch centers have been extended to the leading cities of the state.

Classes

Seniors

IT is customary in this space to picture for the Senior class the great course of life upon which they are embarking. The classical descriptions embody such phrases as "The sea of life," "Steering the good ship Determination," et cetera.

We will not do this. Suffice to say that in the next few pages will be found most of the graduates, their names and activities—similar to the Bertillon system.

Some may achieve fame and fortune; others may accept the whimsical turns of fate without a gurgle. But whether they are known or unknown, sung or unsung, married or marred, they are—God bless them—our seniors.

Medical School

Mr. Robert E. Neff
Administrator University Hospitals

The Indiana University Medical School, composed of the Robert W. Long Hospital, the James Whitcomb Riley Hospital, the Medical Building itself, and several lesser branches, affords one of the best courses in medical training in the country. The work embraces three years of study and practice. An increasingly large number of students are annually enrolling in the school, and are drawn from many states and countries.

The oldest unit of the institution is the Long Hospital. Established in June, 1914, it has admitted to its beds since that time more than twenty-one thousand patients. It fills an important need in the facilities which it offers for the training of physicians, nurses, social service workers, technicians and dietitians.

The newest addition to the school has been the Riley Hospital, erected by contributions made by thirty thousand persons throughout the State of Indiana. The hospital plant with its complete equipment has been pronounced by medical authorities as the most outstanding institution of its kind in America.

Mr. Robert E. Neff is in direct charge of the administration of the University Hospitals, working in conjunction with the Board of Trustees and Indianapolis officials.

Nurses' Training School

The Nurses' Training School, directly an important part of the Medical School, offers a three-year course for a limited number of qualified girls, the work leading to the established R. N. degree. Technically, the course covers the entire field of nursing, with associated subjects in medicine and arts. Mrs. Ethel Palmer Clarke, director, supervises the school in its many and varied aspects. Miss Nellie Gates Brown is assistant director.

Actually taking care of all patients in the new Riley Hospital has added increased value to the already comprehensive course. No other institution of this kind offers as thorough training in children's diseases and deformities as this hospital.

Recent gifts to the Medical School provide for the immediate erection of a modern nurses' dormitory, supplanting to a large extent the individual houses that now take care of the classes.

Social Service Department

The rapid development of professional social work has been felt by the Social Service Department of Indiana University to the extent that each year there are added courses which will make it possible to train students for this interesting and popular vocation. In preparation for it, courses which set forth the various phases of general welfare and social work are presented. These are followed up by the specialized courses in the fields of Family Welfare, Child Welfare, Community Organization and Medical Social Service.

Prof. U. G. Weatherly, of the Sociology Department, Bloomington, is director.

Students of Dietary Department

The Dietary Department

The Dietary Department of the Indiana University Hospitals embodies every feature which modern architecture, science and invention could contribute to make it thoroughly efficient.

The location and equipment of the department were selected with a view to its three-fold purpose: to prepare and serve all hospital meals, to train student dietitians and nurses in dietetics, and to make further studies and investigations in the science of dietotherapy.

The Ball Gift

The James Whitcomb Riley Hospital for Children, a part of Indiana University at Indianapolis, was the object, during Christmas time, of one of the finest gifts ever given by the Ball Brothers, great Muncie philanthropists. The sum of $500,000 was promised the hospital, on the condition that another $500,000 be raised. Steps are now being taken to raise this fund. This is not the first sum given the University by these men in their state-wide series of gifts in the past few years. A total of $100,000 had been given the University previously, $50,000 to the School of Medicine at Indianapolis and $50,000 to the University at Bloomington.

Many compliments have been paid the Ball Brothers for their great generosity in their gifts. Certainly no greater cause could be served than that of giving aid to the crippled children of Indiana.

"The spirit of the first Christmas caught the Ball Brothers in making their gift to the Riley Hospital for Children," said President W. L. Bryan, speaking of the gift.

"In their lifetime the Ball Brothers will see the institutions which they already have aided enter a still larger phase of usefulness. These institutions will be of countless service to thousands yet unborn. All these will rise up to bless the names of the generous givers," said John W. Cravens.

Dental School

The Indiana University School of Dentistry, located at Indianapolis, trains almost four hundred aspiring dentists in the arts of the profession in the four-year course offered at the institution. A faculty of expert instructors, many now in actual practice, each a specialist, conduct the class and experimental work of the students.

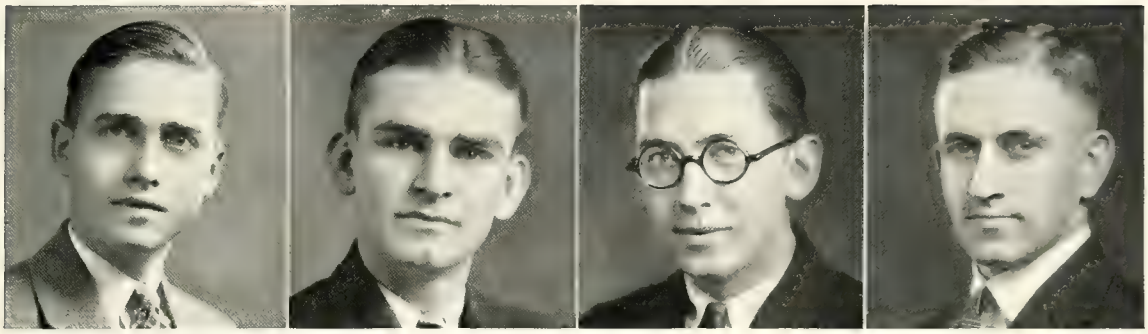

There are many important facts about the school, which ranks as one of the very best in the entire country. It was the tenth dental school to be organized in America and has successfully offered dental education for forty-seven years, first as Indiana Dental College and more recently as the Indiana University School of Dentistry. By an act of the Indiana legislature, on June 1, 1925, the school was purchased by the state and became affiliated with Indiana University. During the many years of the school's existence over two thousand graduates have entered the practice of Dentistry.

On this page we have the senior and junior classes ensemble. The white-coated lads at the top are on the verge of graduation. The content expressions on their faces are indicative of the calm before the great struggle that soon will ensue.

The industrious students at the bottom of the page have yet another milestone to cover; the size of the group assures the present and next generation of excellent extraction, both dental and otherwise.

And turning to this page we view with glee the first two classes of the Dental School. The sophomore ranks number almost a hundred—one of which is a girl. She is in the upper picture, surrounded by her male consorts, bravely fighting her way for a place in the group.

The nonchalant students below have been gathered from the many states, ready to be moulded into suave dentists. The present class totals beyond the century mark, a large class full of hope and vitality.

Indiana Athletics

A year that has done much for Indiana greatness in all lines of sport endeavor reviews the 1925-26 athletic year. With basketball, baseball, wrestling, and track teams that have more than garnered their share of fame for Hoosierdom's University, and a football team that has taken another step toward improvement, Indiana students, alumni, and friends can view the past year with more than usual satisfaction; for Indiana teams have produced, have carried that spirit of "fight" to all quarters and held their place among contending teams.

In looking over the past year, it is mete that those who are largely responsible for victories won should be lauded. First, Z. G. Clevenger, a former athlete and graduate of Indiana, may be called the dean of them all, for he has superintended all athletics, as director. "Navy Bill" Ingram, fighter, coach and true sportsman, although having severed his connection with the football team, will not be forgotten, for through his untiring efforts and spirit the Crimson men have been imbued with "Navy Iron," and have shown fight always. To these two and to Everett Dean, E. C. Hayes, Jack Reynolds, Omar Held, Max Lorber and Jack Merriam, all credit is due for Indiana success.

Regardless of the number of games won or lost, these men have pointed Indiana athletes forward and are responsible for the place Indiana now occupies in the athletic world.

The Stadium Dedication

To those of us who may have had the privilege of witnessing the growth of the project from a brain child to the present material object may regard the same as phenomenal, but with the concerted effort of thousands who felt the pressing need for a greater era of athletics at Indiana University, with a fitting commemoration for our soldier dead, it is not strange that today we have a playing field that will endure through years to come.

The incoming crowds

Passing through a hectic period last year when, through mismanagement, a practically completed horseshoe had to be condemned and torn down, the horizon was momentarily dimmed, but with the passing of another year the structure was complete.

As the chimes tolled the hour of one p. m., Saturday, November 21, 1925, a brilliant crowd, gay in colors and with high spirits, eagerly waiting for the annual historic struggle between two state rivals, sat with bowed heads for a few minutes, a silent tribute to those who have departed, a small return in comparison to lives lost, but thrusting all aside during these few fleeting minutes, a spirit of reverence, fittingly dedicated, took possession of old and young, while a silent prayer was breathed—a prayer to victory and peace through endless ages.

Panoramic view of the new Stadium

After the assembly call by eight buglers, the University band marched onto the field playing "Superb Indiana." The band was followed by a battalion of four companies of the R. O. T. C. corps who, with the aid of the musicians, formed a living picture of the Stadium. The altar erected in the middle of the field was draped with Indiana's service flag by an Indiana girl appropriately dressed for the occasion. After a minute's silence, three volleys were fired by a firing squad, followed by the sounding of taps by the buglers.

The dedication

Major-General Hanson E. Ely, Commandant of the United States War College, gave the principal address, while President Bryan followed with a short speech. American flags, along with combined colors of Purdue and Indiana, were raised at the end of the speeches as both bands, Indiana and Purdue, played the "Star Spangled Banner."

Following the dedicatory ceremonies, Miss June Bolinger, dressed as Miss Indiana, was carried onto the field in a large football, her float being guarded by a consort of girls and football men. With her followers forming a mammoth I. U., Miss Bolinger placed the ball on the 50-yard line just prior to the opening of the game.

Not only was there a stadium to dedicate, but, as part of the extensive building campaign as planned for the memorial, a women's dormitory was also formally opened to guests, friends, and alumni of Indiana Friday afternoon. Thrusting four turrets to the sky in a massive tower that separates the two wings of the building, the edifice is one that carries along exceptionally well the spirit of reverence and commemoration to our dead heroes.

Dedicatory speech

Although formal dedication was postponed until the game with Purdue in Indiana's last football game of the season, Memorial Field was initiated several times before the final tilt. Opening against State Normal, the thought of victory was carried uppermost in the minds of those who took an active part in grooming the stadium for its use on the Hoosier campus. Even in defeat at the hands of the powerful eastern eleven, Syracuse, the spirit of indomitable victory still hovered within its walls, for in giving their best and striving to the utmost to carry on, in defeat, there was victory.

The work of the stadium committee, while it has not been particularly in the public eye, has done much toward the erection of the permanent structure as it now stands. This group in the matters of inspection and supervision of the actual mechanical details have assured Indiana of a stadium that promises to withstand the rigors of climatic change and constant usage.

Although not presenting a pleasing record from the standpoint of statistics and Conference percentage tables, football at Indiana for the 1925 season opened up on a new era of the gridiron sport, one in which each player gave his best for the entire game, and did not falter, although seemingly overwhelmed by almost insurmountable odds. In reviewing the season, six breaks, just six misplays, kept the Crimson colors in the cellar position. Had these accidents, for such they were, not occurred, Indiana would be among the strong contenders of the Western Conference.

From the standpoint of the coaching staff, Indiana could boast of the best, for such men as "Navy Bill" Ingram, one time stellar quarterback and noted pass heaver for the midshipman team in 1922; E. C. Hayes, fresh from turning out championship pigskin elevens in the South; "Rip" Miller, one year ago a noted tackle on the famous Notre Dame outfit that mowed down all opposition; "Mugs" Lorber, previous signal barker for Indiana, who shaped the freshmen for varsity material; "Stew" Butler, ex-Hoosier captain, and "Perk" Perkins, eight letter man from the South, devoted their time and energy toward grooming the gridsters for action.

Through Ingram's efforts his charges played real football and not the pink-tea variety, and aggregations from various Big Ten schools received the surprise of their lives in undertaking to play doormat with our outfit. To all reports a weakling organization, an easy team to overcome, the Scrappin' Hoosiers played them at every turn and not only surprised them, but came in most cases within close range of returning to Bloomington with scalps dangling from their belts.

Crimson Coaching Staff (left to right)—W. A. Ingram, head coach of football; Z. G. Clevenger, athletic director; E. C. Hayes, track coach and football assistant; Max Lorber, freshman coach; Assistant Coach Perkins; Line Coaches "Stew" Butler and "Rip" Miller.

This new attitude of the athletes can only be traced to Ingram, for he alone is responsible for this charge. After suffering from a deluge of touchdowns gained by the famous combination, Friedman to Oosterbaan, in the Michigan game, Indiana fought until the final gun called them from the field with the Wolverines registering up a 63-0 victory against a comparatively green team, but one imbued with that spirit of fight. Trailing the Purple warriors in the third quarter, Captain Marks led his men in a slashing attack that netted a touchdown for the Crimson and tied the score, only to be outlucked by a dropkick in the last few minutes of play which gave Northwestern a much coveted victory.

Charles K. Miles
Senior Manager of Football

Six costly mistakes put Indiana in the cellar;—an official's decision in the Purdue game with Marks on his way to a touchdown ruled him out of bounds, a misunderstood signal and a fumble in the Syracuse tilt, another mistaken signal and an intercepted pass at Northwestern, and the fumbling of a slippery, muddy ball in the Ohio State game plunged the Hoosiers to the depth of gridiron rating, but in doing so, it opened up a new thing in Indiana football and that thing was "Fight."

"I am pleased, regardless of the score, when I know every man has done his best, every player has given everything he has," is the gist of a remark made many times by Ingram. True, Indiana's goal line was crossed, they didn't win the majority of their games, but they fought to the finish—hail to them.

Another favorable sign which points to a more successful season in 1926 is the yearling squad, which proved to be the best outfit that has reported to the freshman coaches in fifteen years. With a reserve like this to draw from, and augmented with the remainder of last year's varsity men, there is no doubt but that Indiana will take a tremendous step forward in football circles.

A nucleus of about eighteen seasoned veterans and a motley group of sophomores and juniors was the material on hand at the beginning of the football season. Coach Ingram and his cohorts proceeded to shape Indiana's football team from this material. While every man was willing enough, there was a lack of experienced material. The one course open for those in charge was to put men through training that would prepare them for future tilts.

Captain Marks, Salmi, Bernoske, Zaiser, Dykhuizen, George Fisher, Prucha, Marker and Childs were all in their last year of competition, and these players were the nucleus around which the team was formed. These men have made football fame for Indiana University, Marks and Fisher being chosen consistently on various mythical elevens.

As the season advanced, the members of the squad acquired the skill of experience. Sophomores and juniors rose to the occasion and established themselves as members of the outfit. And whatever else may be said of the past season, the fact remains that there are now a number of men with experience and a knowledge of football, ready for the call of the gridiron next fall.

Indiana 31—Indiana State Normal 0

Successfully opening the new Memorial Stadium by defeating Indiana State Normal, 31-0, Indiana started her season on the gridiron. Numerous substitutions were made during the game by Ingram to get a line on his reserve material and what could be expected from his men in coming tilts that would prove a great deal more difficult. With scouts from other colleges in the press box, the Hoosiers relied almost entirely on straight football, making sixteen first downs for a total gain of 496 yards.

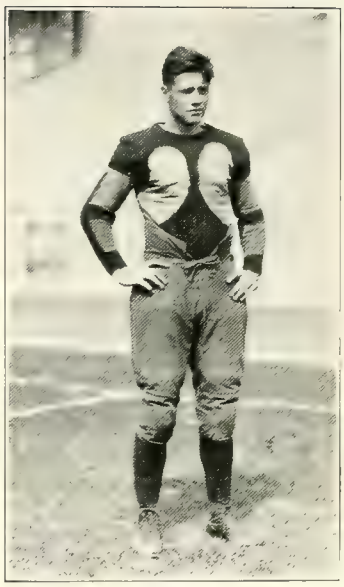

Following a scoreless first period, Captain Larry Marks had the honor of being the first to chalk up a touchdown in the Stadium, early in the second quarter. Stamats and Salmi passed the chalk line for two more markers in the third session, and Tobin went over for two more in the final frame.

Indiana 0—Michigan 63

Making four touchdowns in the first quarter, the great Michigan eleven, rated among the best of the entire country this season, romped over the Crimson gridders for a score of 63-0. Friedman to Oosterbaan, Michigan's sensational all-American passing combination, was at its best when the Hoosiers invaded Ann Arbor, and Ingram's men were smothered under a barrage of forward passes with which they could not cope.

It is interesting to note that in spite of the lop-sided score, Michigan made only three more first downs than did the Crimson. Long passes, twelve of them for a gain of 250 yards, were responsible for the assault upon the scoreboard by the Yostmen. Indiana did some passing on its own hook, completing eight for 85 yards.

Indiana 0—Syracuse 14

A fumble and a misunderstood signal were factors in the 14-0 defeat handed Indiana by the powerful Syracuse eleven in Memorial Stadium. The Orange gridders came west to avenge themselves for the defeat handed to them in 1919.

Only twice was the Crimson goal line threatened, and in both instances Syracuse took advantage of the Hoosier misplays. In the second quarter, standing in the shadow of its own goal posts, Indiana let the pigskin roll loose through signal errors, and Hanson, Syracuse tackle, scooped it up.

Both teams relied on line crashing to bring first downs, and in this Syracuse surpassed, the New Yorkers gaining considerable yardage on a cutback through tackle. Their much vaunted aerial attack was smothered by the Crimson defense. The second largest crowd of the season witnessed the Syracuse fray, a great many of the Hoosiers getting their first glimpse of the new Stadium.

Indiana 25—Miami 7

Miami's flashy grid crew came to Bloomington with a perfect season record, an uncrossed goal line, and went back to the Buckeye state the following day a sadder and wiser team. A brilliant first half display of line plunging and end runs by the Hoosier backfield, aided by sterling work in the line, brought grief to the unbeaten Ohioans, the funereal strain being 25-7.

Miami chilled the hearts of Crimson supporters the first minute of the game when Stryker, backfield ace, slipped a 35-yard pass to Captain Sharkey. The Hoosiers made immediate plans to put the skids under the Buckeye overhead attack. That they were successful is shown in the fact that only five of nineteen attempted Miami passes were completed.

Indiana 14—Northwestern 17

A misunderstood signal and an intercepted pass were responsible for the 17-14 defeat of Indiana at the hands of Northwestern. The game, the Purple homecoming affair, was one of the best Conference frays of the season. The difference in playing ability and power of the rival elevens was even less than the difference in the final score of the game.

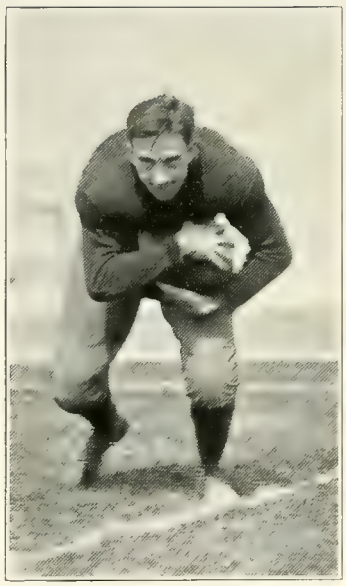

Indiana got the first touchdown of the game when Marks received a pass from Salmi and raced 40 yards for touchdown. In the fourth frame, Indiana's eleven became a giant ramming machine which lashed and punched its way the entire length of the field, and Salmi went across for a touchdown to tie the score. But Northwestern speedily retaliated by working the ball to the 30-yard line, where Captain Lewis' try for a drop kick was successful.

Indiana 0—Ohio State 7

Several Big Ten grid games this season were closely akin to swimming matches, the moleskin wearers floundering in seas of mud until they became unrecognizable to spectators, the pigskin becoming slippery, mud-laden and uncontrollable. The annual Hoosier-Buckeye battle at Columbus was one of these frays. Ohio emerged from the muck with a 7-0 victory.

Larry Marks was the sensation of the day, repeating his flashy playing of 1924 against the Buckeyes. Larry gained 94 yards during the afternoon, and more than once spilled Buckeye ball carriers behind their own line. Punting a water-soaked ball on a sloppy field for a 42-yard average, he more than once kept the Ohioans from a threatening position.

Indiana 32—Rose Poly 7

While Coach Ingram and Salmi were scouting the Purdue-Northwestern game, the Crimson gridders ran rampant over the visiting Rose Poly eleven, 32-7. Practically every player on the Indiana squad donned a helmet during the game, four of the touchdowns being made by substitute backfield men.

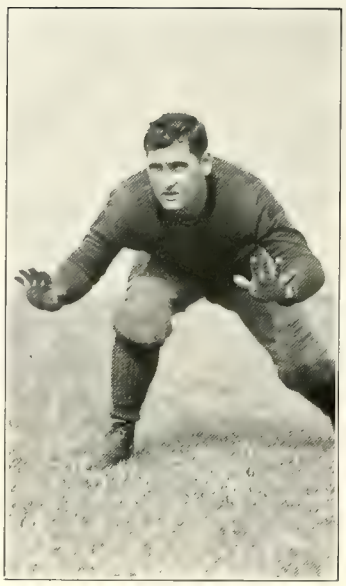

Purdue scouts sat in the press box, and as the Engineers showed utter lack of defensive power, Assistant Coach "Stew" Butler, in charge of the Crimson operations, used only straight football. Captain Marks spent the afternoon on the bench while substitute backs were used.

The final game, Homecoming, dedication of the Memorial Stadium, a meeting of two state rivals, was an encounter that resulted in a 0-0 tie between Indiana and Purdue.

With ideal football weather, Indiana and Purdue lined up for battle for supremacy. Indiana, choosing to defend the east goal, kicked off to Purdue, who returned the ball on the first play to midfield. During the first quarter Purdue seemed to have a slight advantage, the Hoosier playing being a bit ragged and signal calling a little jerky.

With the changing of goals, Indiana played a decidedly better game than the visiting Boilermakers.

During the last quarter, Indiana started a march down the field, only to lose the ball on downs on the Purdue 30-yard line. After going from one end of the gridiron to the other during the greater part of the quarter, Captain Marks, after the quarterback called for a punt on the Indiana 10-yard line, faked a kick and ran the length of the field for what would have been a touchdown had not the referee called him back, claiming that Larry had stepped outside the chalk mark on going around end. Almost after the next play the final gun called an end to the annual struggle.

Indiana's New Football Coach

To "Pat" Page, Indiana's new football coach, go all good wishes for good luck. With a record of success behind him, it is hoped that he will continue the good work here. Page is a graduate of the University of Chicago, where he was a star on the football team, and later an assistant to Coach A. A. Stagg. Coming to Butler College at Indianapolis a few years ago, Page brought Butler from the depths of the football pile to national renown. The new coach came to Bloomington March 31 to begin spring football practice after spring vacation. The first meeting of the gridiron aspirants, held in the Trophy room, found about forty men reporting.

A flying Crimson five won for themselves a place in Indiana's basketball hall of fame this year when they tied for the Crimson's first Big Ten championship. It is nothing to their discredit that they must share the blue ribbons with Purdue, Michigan and Iowa. The official standing disclosed a four-way tie for the honor, but it was a well-known fact around the circuit that Coach Everett Dean's basketeers were the most versatile of all.

A driving, whirlwind finish earned for the Hoosier quintet a place in the hardwood sun. With four games remaining on their schedule, the Crimson-clad netmen staged a come-back and disposed of Minnesota, Illinois, Northwestern and Wisconsin in successive battles. Too much credit can not be given Coach Dean, who, in his first two years, has tutored one second-place team and one winner. It speaks well for Indiana's future in the great winter sport.

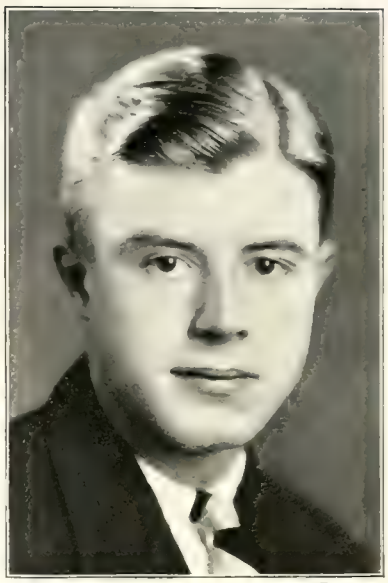

Indiana started the season with a veteran aggregation, playing the role of a favorite. The manner in which the Deanmen had pushed the champion Ohio State five the year before made them start the 1925-26 season a marked team. From the year before, Dean had Krueger, Beckner, Sponsler and Winston back

The highly touted Crimson netmen were first exposed to the fire of enemy sharpshooters this season on December 10, when the strong Miami (O.) University quintet invaded Bloomington. Displaying the same dazzling offensive that had carried them to within one notch of the top last year, Indiana easily defeated the Buckeyes, 47-26. Krueger made high scoring honors in this struggle by sending seven field goals through the hoop. Coach Dean started Robinson at center in the place made vacant by Logan. Many substitutions were made, and the game hardly was a fair test for the Crimson crew.

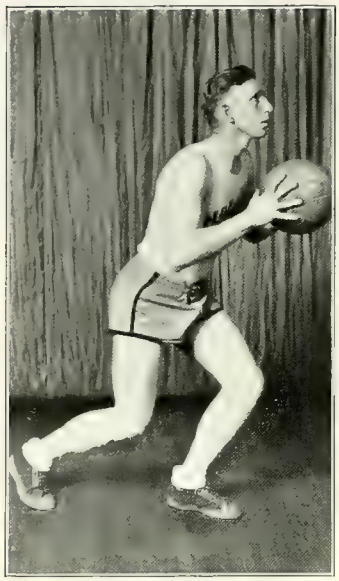

DePauw's crafty cagers handed the Crimson a jolt the following Tuesday at Greencastle when they bottled Indiana's offense and passed and shot their way to a 33-20 victory. The Hoosiers played a ragged game, and at no time looked like the team of the year before. That this reverse was good for the team's future, however, was evidenced in their later games.

On December 19 the Deanmen encountered Wabash at Bloomington and walked away with the big end of a 35-27 count. The Cavemen, by virtue of their two star forwards, Robinson and DeVol, put up a game fight, but were no match for the superior shooting of Krueger, Beckner and Sponsler. Indiana came back from the Christmas vacation a rejuvenated aggregation, and on January 6 walloped Kentucky, 34-23, in their final pre-Conference fray. A new luminary was uncovered in this tussle in the person of Frank Sibley, who proved a whirlwind at center and earned for himself a place on the first five.

Led by Captain "Black" Rasey, Minnesota presented itself at Bloomington as the first Big Ten opponent of the season for Coach Everett Dean's ambitious basketmen. The Gophers fought furiously, but after the regulation 40 minutes were forced to journey back to Minneapolis on the short end of a 33-28 marking. Indiana won, but their victory was not impressive, and it revealed the long, hard row they would have before taps was sounded on the 1925-26 season. Heading the pack of Big Ten basketball greyhounds by reason of their victory over Minnesota, the Crimson netters treked to Wisconsin on January 12 and suffered their first Conference loss, 33-31. A tight Badger defense proved the undoing of Indiana, and the Cardinals waltzed away with the game in the final moments by a two-point margin. Krueger was the outstanding star for the Hoosiers, garnering 14 points for high scoring honors. Sponsler put up an excellent defensive game for the Crimson, and Beckner's floorwork was commendable. It was anybody's game from the start to the finish, and the fact that Wisconsin was performing on their home floor augured well for the future of Indiana in the Conference scramble.

A few days later Indiana was further shoved down in the Big Ten standing. This time the trick was turned by Coach Sam Barry's Iowa quintet at Iowa City by a 29-22 margin. The Hawkeyes had, perhaps, the best defensive team in the Conference, and were known far and wide as a "home" aggregation. At first thought it seemed that a defeat at the hands of Iowa was quite a smirch on the Crimson outfit, but when it is taken into consideration that Barry's team tied for the Conference championship and repulsed practically every team on the Iowa floor, the outlook was encouraging.

Winston

Krueger

The Crimson netters showed a complete reversal of form two days later when they took Northwestern into camp at Evanston, by the convincing score of 39-31. Northwestern got away to a big lead at the start, but Indiana rallied and knotted the marking at the half, 17-17. The score seesawed back and forth during the second period until the final moments, when the Deanmen drew away to an eight-point victory. Frank Sibley easily was the star of the fracas, chalking up six baskets and three free throws besides playing a fine floor game. Winston's height was invaluable in obtaining the tip-off for the winning five. This victory put Indiana back in the running for the Big Ten gonfalon with two victories and as many losses.

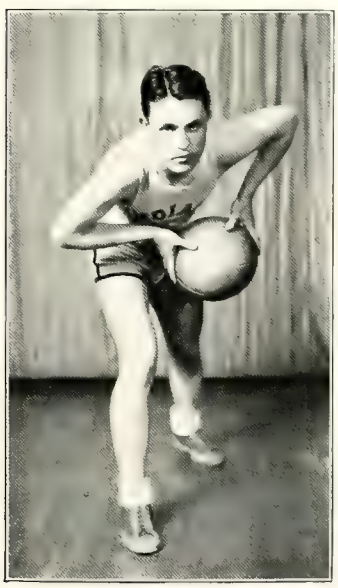

Sibley

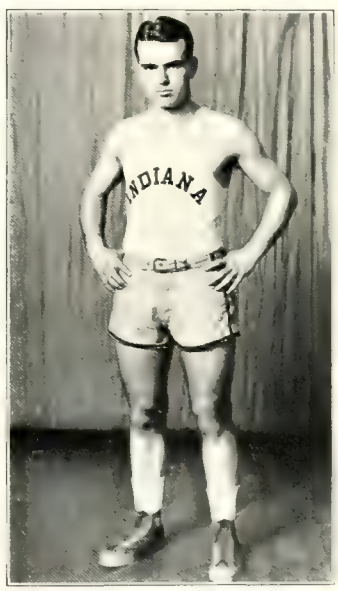

Returning to their home floor, the embryo champions paused a few days and then took on the task of conquering their ancient and venerable rival from Lafayette. In the 37-34 battle, the Deanmen well deserved the step up the Conference ladder that they gained by annexing this scalp.

Some few days after this occasion, Iowa sent her basketball team to Bloomington. Indiana easily demonstrated her superiority in a rough-and-ready affair. The Iowa boys displayed their customary defensive tactics, but to no avail. The accurate marksmanship of Krueger, Beckner, Sibley and Sponsler was too much even for the guarding Barrymen. Robert Correll, a former Bloomington High School star, became eligible at this game, and, when substituted, performed well, garnering two field goals and playing a nice floor game.

About this time disaster descended upon the Crimson aggregation. Upon visiting Purdue at Lafayette, February 13, the Deanmen suffered their second defeat of the season by a two-point margin. The score read 31-29 in favor of Lambert's proteges. The count stood at 29-29, with two minutes to go, when the Boilermakers started the final rally that carried them over the top. It was another one of those games in which the ultimate victor is decided by a toss-up. It was a great game between two great basketball machines.

Derr

From this time on until the end of the season there were some changes made. In the first place, Indiana showed new form at Minnesota on the night of February 26 by thoroughly trouncing the Gopher five, 41-23. The Crimson quintet played a close-in game and had the Northerners at their mercy all the way. Beckner and Krueger scored almost at will, the former snagging 14 points and the latter accounting for six field goals. The score that the Deanmen amassed in this fray was the largest rung up by any team this far in the race. The following day Coach Dean escorted the team to Northfield, Minn., where the strong Carleton College aggregation was encountered. Dean formerly coached at this institution. Despite their hard game of the night before, the Crimson netmen managed to defeat the Minnesotans 38-36.

Beckner

Returning to their home stand, Indiana was sent against Northwestern for the second time. As before, the Crimson-clad netters proved their superiority, letting the Evanston team down by a 34-28 count. The Hoosiers started slow, gaining momentum as they went. At the half the Purple quintet led by two points, but they faltered in the second period. Palmer Sponsler carried off the scoring honors in this struggle, garnering five field goals and two free throws for a total of 12 points.

With visions of a Conference title as a new possibility, the Deanmen boarded the train for Illinois for one of the last games of the season. This battle was the most crucial of the year, for upon its outcome rested the chance to tie for the Big Ten crown. Completely upsetting the forecast, Indiana triumphed over Coach Ruby's Illini netmen by a 28-25 score. A determined comeback in the last seven minutes of play turned the trick. This victory definitely eliminated Illinois from any chance to cop the Big Ten title and put Indiana within one game of tieing for the honor.

Farmer

Wisconsin furnished the opposition for Indiana in the final game of the year at Bloomington. A victory for the Crimson team meant a tie for the Conference flag, and a defeat meant basketball oblivion. The score was 35-20. Every man on the team performed perfectly, and it was a real band of champions that wrecked the Wisconsin machine. Beckner's six field goals enabled him to pass Spradling, of Purdue, for the honor of leading the Big Ten individual scorers. It was a fitting finish to a splendid, but hectic, net race.

Purdue came to Bloomington, accompanied by many rooters. Dean's cohorts downed them in a batting fray for both sides, 15-11. DePauw took the long end of a 6-5 score at Greencastle, after which Wabash won a game 10-7. Northwestern furnished the next victory for the Crimson, for after numerous hits and errors the Deanmen nosed them out, 13-12.

Wabash proved to be a Nemesis for the Hoosiers in a return game on the home lot, winning a 4-3 victory.

On June 1, Indiana won from Chicago, 3-1. This gave a sudden jump to Indiana stock and caused much worry in rival Conference camps over the boost in the percentage column.

In a return game with Purdue, the Indiana nine had no trouble in chalking up a 9-3 victory. Only one more game remained for the Crimson, that with Purdue. The Boilermakers were beaten again.

The ultimate outcome depended on whether Ohio State dropped any of her remaining games. The Buckeyes lost to Michigan, and Indiana ascended the 1925 baseball throne of the Conference.

Six veterans were lost to the team by graduation: Captain Niness, Woodward, Link, Moomaw, Kight, and Haworth. Thirteen letters were awarded and Emery Druckamiller, second baseman, succeeded as captain for 1926.

Track

The 1925 season saw a new era open in track activities at Indiana, for with the acquisition of a new coach, E. C. Hayes, who had been noted for former track outfits in the South, and a wealth of new material coming in, greater efforts were spent in perfecting and producing a winning cinder crew.

With a nucleus of a few veterans and letter men around which to build his competing team, Hayes had a difficult task on hand. Looking back on Indiana track teams proved disconcerting, but by gradually working with his men until they were ready for competition, a good track team was produced.

In indoor track events, Indiana did not win one of her two scheduled meets, facilities being poor for training for indoor events. A wooden oval built behind the Men's Gymnasium served as a running track for the aspirants for indoor meets.

Against Chicago, February 6, Indiana was deluged under a score of 69 2/3-

In outdoor track, the Hayesmen stood .500 per cent with two losses and two gains. Opening on the cinders, April 18, against DePauw, the Asbury thinlies managed to nose out ahead by one point, beating the Crimson performers 70 2/3 to 69 1/3.

Against Miami, the Hoosiers fared better, for the Ohioans were beaten on the Jordan cinders by a score of 67 to 64. The Buckeyes proved to be worthy opponents, and the Crimson took the lead only in the last events by virtue of several firsts.

Cross-Country

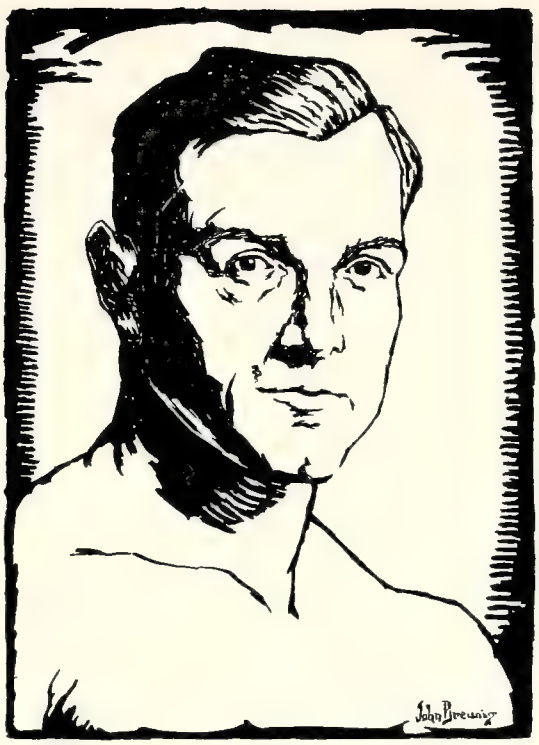

Taking all the handicaps into consideration, the season of 1925 for the cross-country outfit was a success. Winning one dual meet from Purdue, 24-31, and another from Chicago, 28-38, the Crimson harriers lost to Notre Dame, 23-32, and finished eighth in the Conference meet. The harriers copped first honors at the A. A. U. meet at Louisville, annexing one team cup, one individual cup and three medals. In the meet at Louisville, although failing to come in first place, Alexander, Rose, Caine, Little and White finished in a group from third place to sixth.

Wrestling

At the beginning of the mat season Indiana faced the problem of developing a wrestling team of seven weights with only one regular remaining from last year's co-championship team. Swain, captain-elect, did not return to school; George Fisher, Conference heavyweight champion, was ineligible, and Hoffman and Ex-Captain Reed were lost by graduation. Saul was elected to lead the 1925-26 team that made an excellent showing in winning five meets, losing two and placing a good fourth in the final Big Ten count.

Old Sol cast his first beams of brightness on the shady outlook when Jack Reynolds, world's welterweight champion, was signed for the fifth year to coach the Crimson matmen. Stock took another jump on the appearance of Wilson, Conference light-heavy champion in 1924, who was ineligible last year, and Walter Fisher, letter man in the heavyweight class last year.

Lynch was recruited for the 115-pound class; Green took over the 125-pound job; Props and Forkner both looked good at 135 pounds; Captain Saul and Wampler split work in the 145-pound division; Lehr, a veteran who was forced out by injuries last year and again this year, was best of the 158-pounders; Wilson flashed excellent form at 175 pounds, and Fisher developed rapidly into a first class heavyweight.

A new system of arranging Conference wrestling meets was introduced this year, by which the teams were divided into two groups. A team was to wrestle only schools in its own division, the champion of each group to fight it out for the Big Ten flag, and the second place teams to wrestle for third and fourth positions. In the division with Indiana were the University of Michigan, Ohio State, Purdue and Northwestern.

By virtue of a single defeat at the hands of Ohio State, Big Ten runner-up, the Crimson met the University of Iowa, second placers in the opposing group. A bitterly contested meet was dropped to the Hawkeyes, 14-12. Illinois copped the Conference honors by defeating Ohio State.

Prospects were encouraging for gaining two or three individual championships at Purdue where the Big Ten meet was held, but because of a reversal of form, the team came back only with Fisher as second place choice; Lynch, third place, and Green, fourth. Wilson, after taking the championship in 1924 and throwing the 1925 champion in the dual meet with Purdue, was eliminated by a fall in the second round.

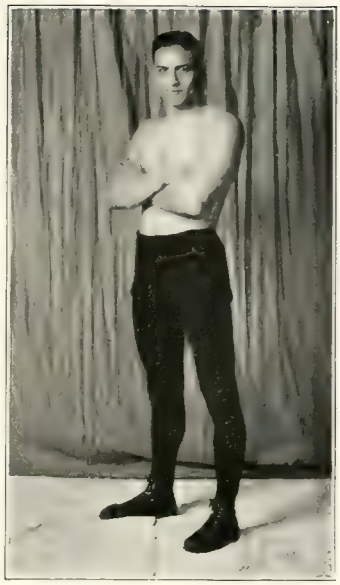

Lynch

Green

Wilson's individual record for the season was the best of the team, however. He won five falls and one decision in dual meets, not losing a match. Captain Saul, participating in but four meets, won three falls and lost a decision. Wampler, who three times defeated Saul for the right to take the mat in the 145-pound division, won one decision, and lost a fall and a decision. Fisher won one fall, five decisions and lost a decision. Lynch, Props and Green all did well in their first year of competition. Childs wrestled only once, in the absence of Wilson, and that time gained a fall. Eberhart, regular 115-pounder last year, could not make the weight this year and did not participate.

The team will be weakened considerably by the graduation this spring of Captain Saul, Eberhart, Lynch, Green, Lehr, Fewell, Robertson and Childs. A promising nucleus remains in Schoolfield, 125; Props and Forkner, 135; Wampler and Held, 145; Taylor, 158, and Wilson, 175.

Swimming

The 1925-26 season was an unsuccessful one for the swimming team, for it was defeated in six meets and did not win any. The team was handicapped by the lack of a sufficient number of good swimmers. Although scoring some first places, the team was short on other scores.

William Merriam, of the Indianapolis Athletic Club, assumed the coaching of the team again this year, after one year's absence. He faced the difficult task of forming a team with only one letter man remaining from the preceding year. Several sophomores showed well, however, from the beginning of practice. The 160-yard relay team was made up of Zaiser, Miller, Bolyard and Williams. The medley team was composed of Royer, Miller and Zaiser.

Williams is the only man lost to the squad through graduation this year.

Boxing

This is the latest acquisition to the field of sports at the University. Under the tutelage of Jack DeVault, instructor, a promising team for a first season appearance was developed.

The boxing team entered for competition only once and that at the Middle States meet at Gary. All the Crimson maulers showed well, and Ikerd starred by going to a draw in the finals and losing the decision on the toss to his opponent. Ikerd also was chosen to represent Indiana at the national meet held at Boston.

Approximately forty men went out for boxing during the year and took and gave plenty of punishment in mastering the intricacies of footwork and left jabs.

Membership is open to all undergraduates who have won 100 points and posture acceptable to the rules of the organization. The first set of numerals is granted when a girl has obtained 400 points and attained a better posture. Seven hundred points wins an award of old English numerals if the girl has still bettered her posture. The coveted monogram sweater is awarded only to the girl with 1,000 points and an A posture.

Hockey

Hockey this year, thanks to the weatherman, developed into a contest to see which girls could stop most quickly; or in seeing which one could slide furthest in the mud. In fact, because of the wet weather, and even with the diligent supervision of the coach, those who played for the first time last fall are still wondering what the game is all about.

The slogan of the game is "Stick To It," and a more favorable season for living up to this slogan could scarcely be found. Teams were chosen before Thanksgiving, but the tournament games, after being postponed from week to week, finally had to be played on the men's speed-ball courts in front of the Men's Gymnasium.

Thelma Harr was hockey sport head for this year, while the varsity squad consisted of Wanda Miller, captain; Mary Milton, Mary Adams, Elizabeth Teare, Ellen McGranahan, Laura Johanningsmeier, Frances Gabriel, Harriett Gabriel, Mary Blankenship, Thalia Oliphant and Louise Runner.

Soccer

Soccer is the rough game for girls. As some of the girls put it, "Just a good peppy sport that all the girls enjoy." Last fall saw over a hundred coeds signed up to play the game. Competition for berths on the various teams was keen, and only through the survival of the swiftest were teams finally chosen.

Inclement weather had a great part in the playing of scheduled matches, and practices were few and far between. Because of a muddy field, the girls could not play, so the tournament was postponed from time to time and was not completed until just before Christmas holidays.

The Sophomores carried off the cup, while the Senior outfit came in for second place. The Juniors annexed third position, which left the first year players in the cellar. Notwithstanding the bad weather and poor playing field, there seemed to be more interest and effort put forth this fall than in previous seasons.

Versatile players for the year 1925 were Katherine Welman, captain; Josephine Renier, Wilma Layman, Florence Rutledge and Catherine Ort.

Basketball

Girls' basketball at Indiana is confined to inter-class and inter-house games and tournaments. The type of game played by them is slightly different from the men's game, in that there are six players, three guards and three forwards. One of the forwards acts as center, doing the jumping. The games and teams are under the direction of and are coached by Miss Grace Moberly.

The varsity coed basketball team this year was composed of Ellen McGranahan, captain; Florence Rutledge, Wilma Layman, Dorothy Clarke, Katherine Welman and Louise Ritterskamp. In the inter-class tournament, the team representing the class of '26 was the winner. Ellen McGranahan was the captain of this team. This is the fourth consecutive year that the senior team has won the class championship. The inter-house tournament was won by the east wing of Memorial Hall. Florence Rutledge was captain of this team. The coed basketball season ended with an informal banquet held in the women's gymnasium in conjunction with the coed swimming team.

A successful defense

Baseball

The female "varsity" nine may be seen any day in the springtime, practicing on their diamond, Dunn Meadow, all engaged in the great American game. Among the stars of the outfit are Florence Rutledge, Katherine Welman and Wilma Layman. The game, played by the coeds, strengthens the truth of the adage, "The female of the species is more deadly than the male."

The outstanding reason why baseball was given to the coeds seems to be a veiled secret, but it does keep them from asking questions at games, and follows the general policy of allowing the girls to do as the men in their athletics. This year's crew holds promise of playing some interesting games. Competition is usually keen for berths on the squad.

The game is played under the direction of Miss Moberly of the department, as soon as the weather in the spring permits.

In its turn comes the game made famous by Lenglen and Wills, as far as the female sex is concerned. Last year, entrants of those who would claim kinship with the maid of California were few and the annual tournament of the classes was not held. The inclement weather also prevented the fairer sex from counting "love all," and "deuce." The tournament, sponsored by the Outing Club, was postponed from time to time, and in the end it was not held.

Even with such difficulties to contend with, many were the spirited battles fought among the girls for court supremacy and many amused themselves in driving the small white ball over the net, and backstop as well. Among those that played the court game three were outstanding. These three, Anna Ruth Haworth, Esther Moll and Margaret Heine, were named on the mythical varsity team.

Dancing

Jane Adams
Dancing Head

Not the Charleston, not even waltzing, but attired in filmy and drapy cloth the coeds disport themselves on the green, daintily hopping and skipping through the intricacies of the dance. It is a known fact that for the individual, dancing opens up that avenue to greater poise, grace, self-expression, and a sense of the aesthetic, and we feel that those who delve into the mysteries of the terpsichorean art are really benefited.

Dancing classes here are under the direction of Miss Barbour. She directs three beginning classes and one advanced class composed of girls who already have had two years of the study of dancing.

Each year it is customary for the department to present in the spring a May Festival. On May 20, 1925, the Grecian myth, "Proserpina," was portrayed on Dunn Meadow. At the conclusion of the performance, June Bolinger, elected Queen of the May, was crowned by Edith Garrett, president of W. S. G. A. The festival was one of the best ever given.

Girls' Rifle Team

Louise Runner
Captain

The girls' rifle team has not functioned as successfully this season as it might have done. Various reasons have prevented the girls from taking an active part in hitting the bullseye. No facilities and lack of money have hampered the regularity of practice.

Last year it was decided to discontinue the girls' team and, for a period, it seemed to have lapsed into a state of somnolence. It was awakened this year by those who wished to participate in rifle firing. Two meets were scheduled this year, and late reports gave a victory to Indiana's representatives, while the news from the second telegraphic meet was not officially received. Louise Runner has piloted the destiny of the rifle team during the past season.

The Maxwell Prize

The James Darwin Maxwell Prize is awarded annually to a woman undergraduate in consideration of her high scholarship, character, and sufficient attainment in physical education to be eligible for an I. U. sweater. Miss Juliett Maxwell, '83, Director of Physical Education for Women in the University, has offered this award since 1919 in memory of her father, James D. Maxwell, '33.

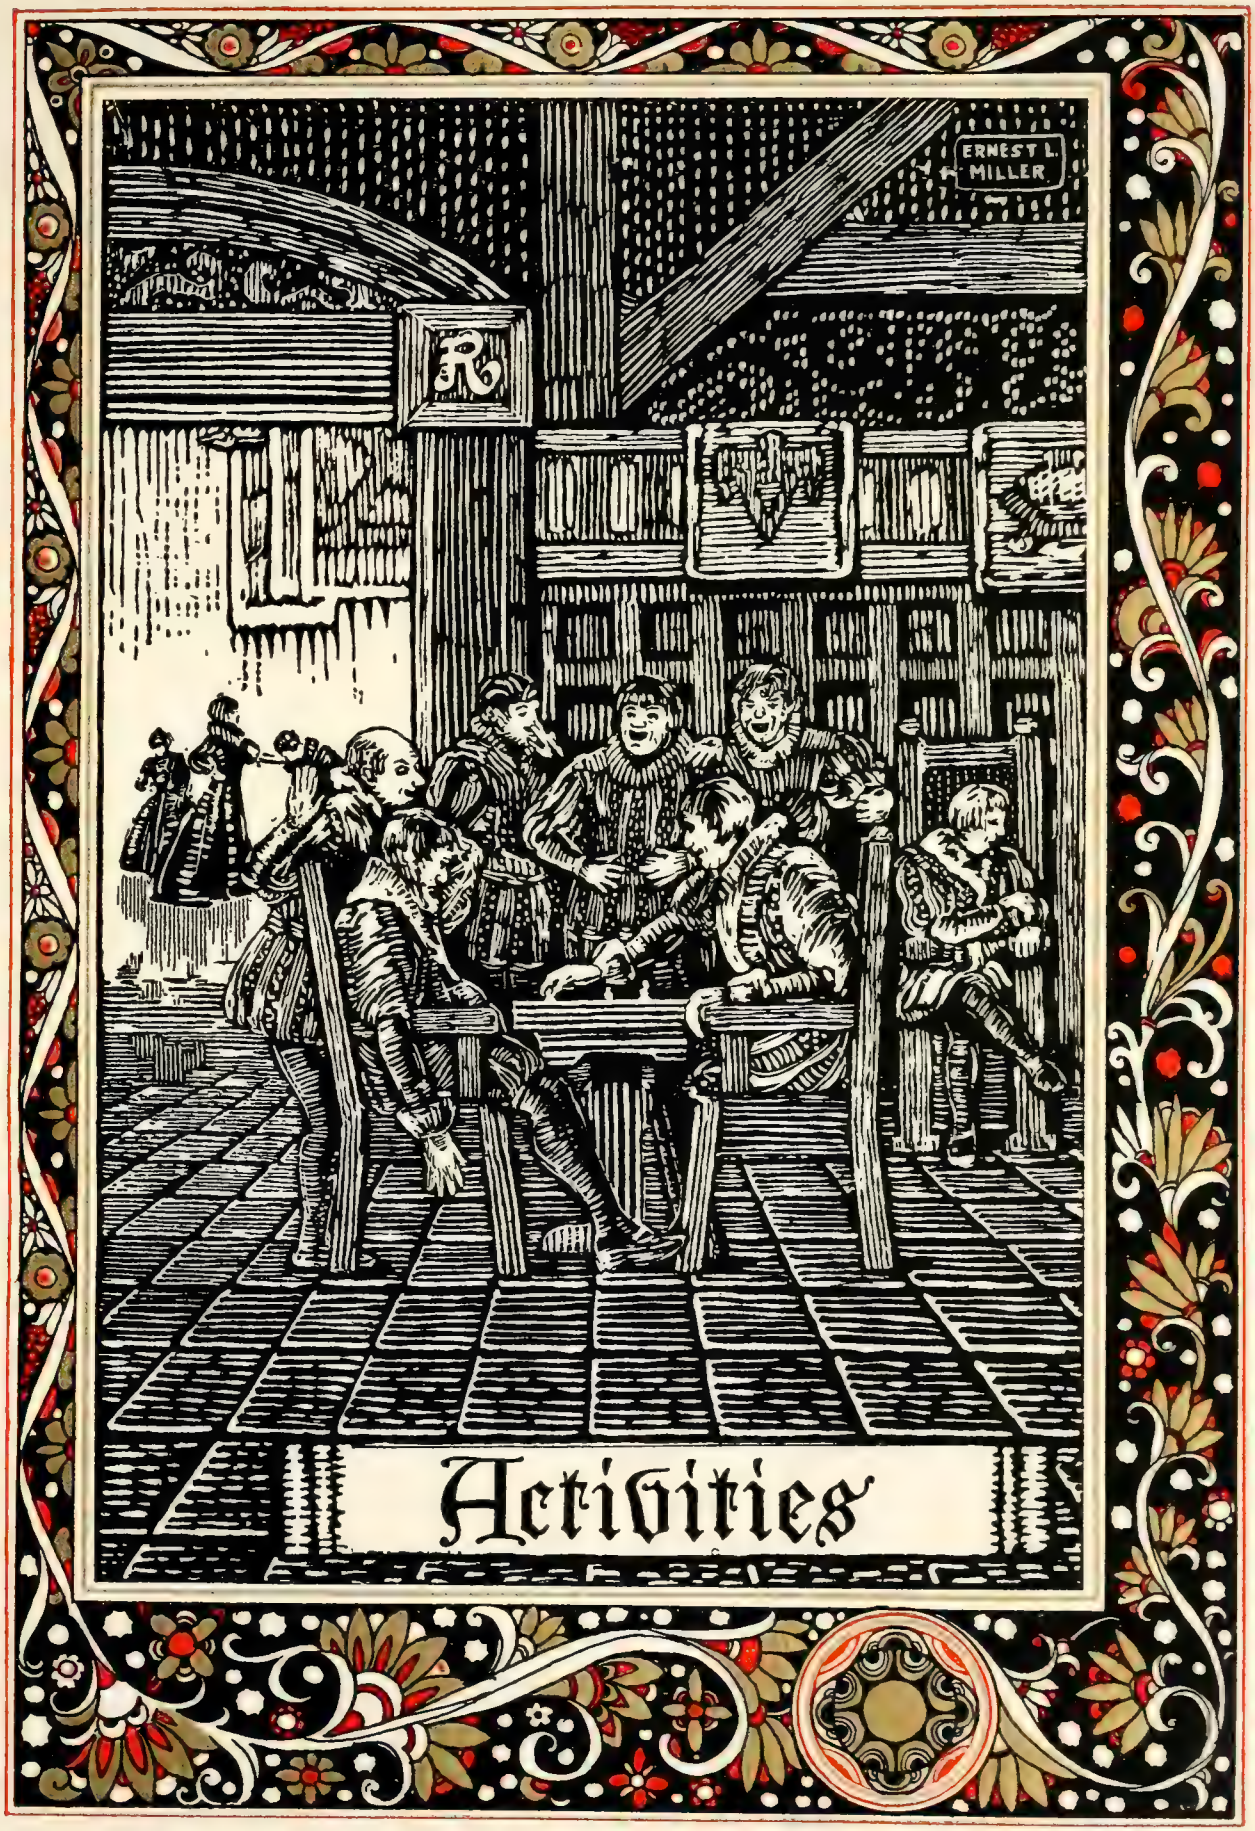

In 1919 the medal, which consists of a triangle representing the three parts of an individual—Corpus, Mens, and Mores, surrounded by a wreath, was awarded to Mary Deputy. In 1920 this prize was not given. In 1921 it was awarded to Louise Van Cleave. The year 1922 saw the medal given to Harriet Post Rawles. Marian Morris Thompson won it in 1923, and Ruth Poehner in 1924. Esther Moll was the winner of the Maxwell Prize in 1925.

Representative Indianians

REALIZING the inability of any small group to choose eight seniors that are predominantly representative of Indiana University from the recognized standpoints of service and time-giving energy, the staff of the 1926 Arbutus has given this choice to the student body in an all-day election held last fall.

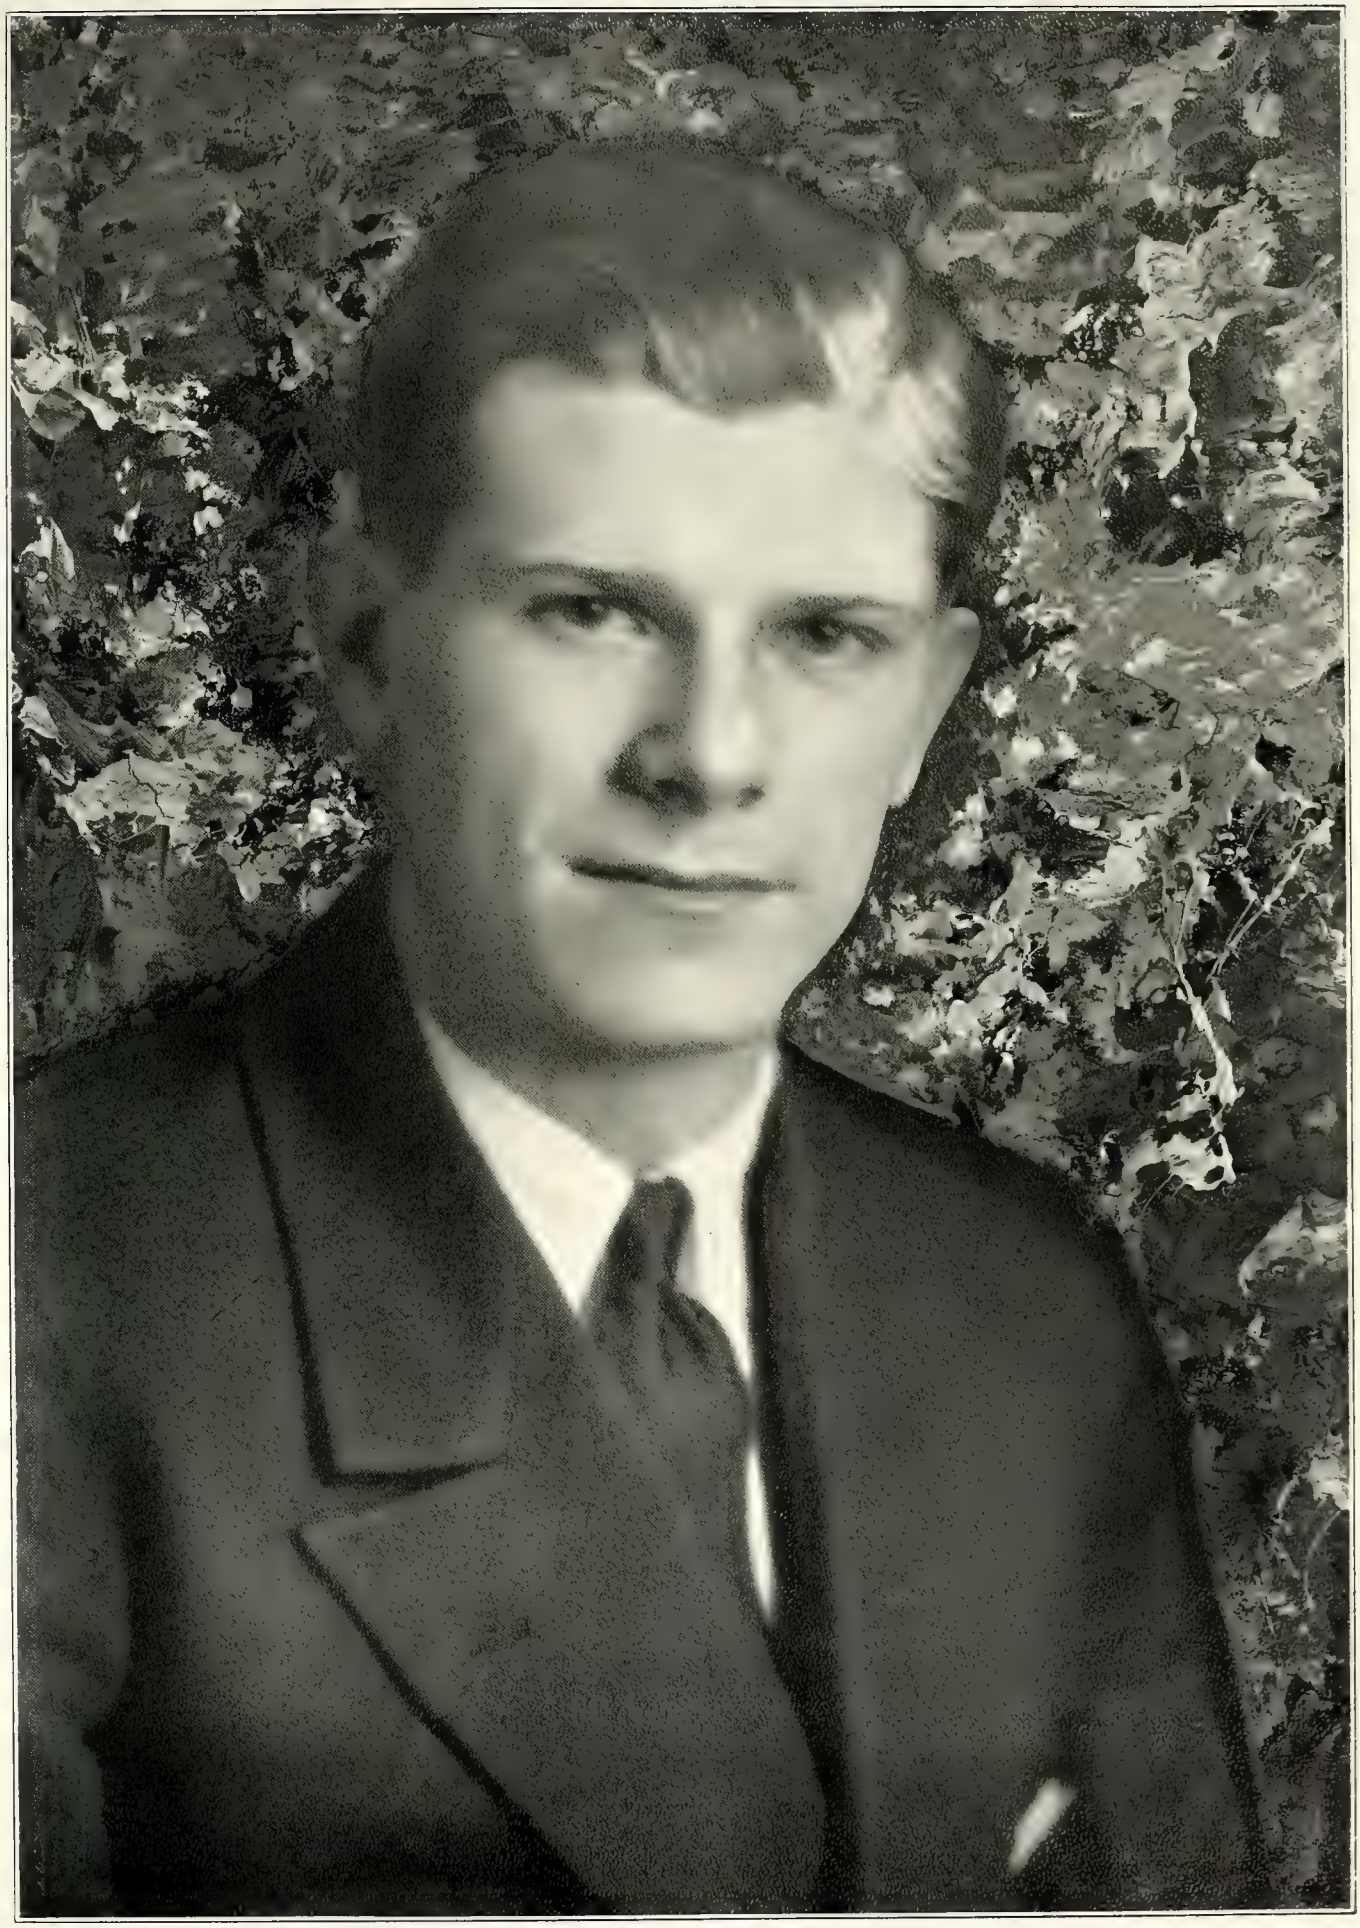

It is accepted that these men and women have worked with untiring zeal and endeavor for their ideal of a greater Indiana. By permanent recognition in this, the 1926 Arbutus, the campus expresses its belief in their worth and their service to this school.

A Tale Retold

Now they tell a strange tale of strange things that happen in each year at this seminary of ours. And it is a tale of thought and bitterness and contest and joy and sorrow, all those things which matter to those of us who do not think that Life leads only to Futility.

Kirkwood Way

Now each year as the moon grows mellow with the dust mist of autumn, there comes to this great seminary a vast crowd, some to learn to subdue themselves in the maelstrom of learning, others to prove that the pursuit of pleasure is the greatest thing in existence.

And they trudge over to the house of the athletes to be jammed and jostled in a weary wait to inscribe their names indelibly upon the roll of information, and then to seek the masters that they may bask under the drying rays of their intellectualism.

The Genesis

The Book Shoppe

So to the house of the books they go, to seek the thought of those great who have gone before them, and to make loud lamentation at the cost of learning, for verily, lads and wenches both must pay.

The feudal strife

Then it is but a short space until the yearlings are tested to determine their fitness to be members of the great clan of Indiana. And they do vie with the birds' nests of the year before.

At one another they charge full tilt in desperate effort to unhorse one another, and thus prove their inalienable right to be a knight of the realm.

A tumbler of sack—

To the survival—

And even into the mire they continue the struggle that the fit may survive and the weakling depart from the land of the brave, for there is no place in our fair domain for the coward.

So on the rope they test their strength, and receive their first lesson in the power of the pull in order to become renowned about the place. And, God help them, some do seem to learn the lesson full well.

—of the Fit

And the year trudges onward until the doughty men of the law and justice do grow incensed at the yappings of the lowly sons of Aesculapius, until they do organize their forces for combat.

The March of Justice

The Advance of Science

To protect their leechy honor, the men of knives and pills do gather together their forces and drill them right roundly that they protect the citadel of Owen from the sharp boasts of the warlike men of Maxwell.

So to the struggle they go, amid the clamor of weeping horns and sighing heavens, on to the fray determined to return either victorious or bruised, and the horns lament the coming bloodshed.

Damp Troubadours

After us—the Deluge

And finally the battle hovers over them, and sneers at the men to urge them onward in the great fight with a living and elusive pigskin, doubly elusive because both sides in the fray are wont to pore over dusty parchment or dead things.

Masquerade

And so to the fairs of the season, where a thousand maidens frolic in most bizarre costumes, and vie for prizes to reward the novelty of their thoughts, and the attractiveness of their plans.

To streamered booths these maidens lure the hapless men to sell them dainty bits of food that were never considered when the Creator did arrange the digestive systems of human folk.

Ye County Faire

Ye Sharpers

And on to other booths of heartless wenches who seek to outdo their rival sirens at the booth across the way, until the knight is nauseated at the satiation of all his desires for food and drink.

Entertainments, too, they do claim to give, and the manor of Delta Zeta does send forth its most beauteous ones to please the visiting folk, until this dainty chorus from the fields of corn does weary the assembly.

Too tired maidens

Soon to the girls of the house of Sigma Kappa, where buxom maids do smile in furious effort to enchant the lookers-on with Sigma Kappa dance and humor.

To the health of Sigma Kappa

Dark clouds over fair Delta Gamma

And to the minstrels of the maidens of Delta Gamma, disguised more beautifully than in life, until their white gloves do grow gray at the sight of the faces of their mistresses.

So the parade goes on with maidens playing clown quite naturally, and casting seductive glances here and there in proof of their own ability to create laughter in the mardi-gras of life.

Clowns of Phi Omega Pi

The weariness of Alpha Chi

Even the bar maids do say their little piece, quaint with its age and full of fleeting memories of inns and taverns when man drank draughts for the admiration of the ladies.

The Passing Breeze

A day of days arrives at last, according to the custom of days, and the great men of muscle do vie upon the gridiron, and maids do sell small bags of air to aid the effect of the rousing cheers.

And the teams sally forth for the honor of their waving colors, to fight in honest war to push the kicking ball across the foreign boundary, exemplary of the game of life that they shall play too soon.

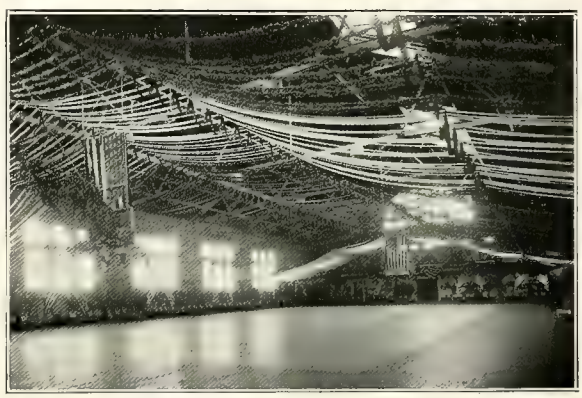

Strife—

—and Sadness

There do be times, too, when the team travels far away in distant lands, and the loyal mob goes forth to the ancient barn where we are wont to assemble to watch the flashings of the gridgraph.

To the dance of the soldiers the crowd hastens and the soldiers totter about in their stiff outfits under the colorful streamers that sigh dejectedly at the sight.

The Revelry of the Soldiers

And the weeks pass along into the ages toward the greatest Homecoming of the seminary, which does make it necessary for the loyal and conscientiously lazy knights to spare some time to the practice of shouts.

Allegiance—

—to Gigantism

Halls, too, must be dedicated to memories of those that are gone, and there comes the opportunity for the masters to parade about in their sombre gowns and tam-o'-shanters to the ceremony.

The procession must wind about the silent towers of the halls of stone wherein so many pages of the theses of divers lives have been written to the mellow tune of the song of education.

The Dedication—

—of a Memory

Until, at last, the crowd must halt before the new-born castle and sing solemn hymns that mingle with the soothing melodies of the wind to commemorate the birth of a beautiful memorial.

The Banquet Board

And the loyal sons who have passed out the gates of the seminary return to pay their homage and to renew the bonds that unite them to the cherishing mother, at a great banquet of inspiring speeches.

The fire burns bravely and fiercely on the memorable meadow where ghosts of long ago flit about gleefully in the shadows that flicker at their own blackness, in the thoughts of other victories.

Burnt Offering

Invasion of Canaan

And long lines of motors pour into the parish as they bear the pilgrims back to the shrine, and drivers wheel the things about most skillfully to avoid collisions between the clans of Indiana and Purdue.

The President leads the way in the celebration, and some fair maid does knight him with the badge that holds the joyous thousands returned to see a great team fight an honorable battle.

Long Live the King!

The manors, too, must be dressed after the fashion of holidays, and they do blossom forth with myriad streamers and vivid hues and tints that hold the eyes of the astute judges as they wander about.

The Manor of the Phi Gams—

—and that of Delta Upsilon

And other houses, too, not to be outdone, bedeck themselves with great letters and divers ornaments to enhance their natural beauty in honor of the great occasion of the return of the brothers.

Some there are who decorate after the fashion of a prophecy, and these do display the outcome of the struggle as they would have it, and they present grotesque figures to represent the fighting spirit of Indiana.

The Pitfall of Sigma Nu

Naval Conquest

And yet others do immortalize the name of that great coach so affectionately termed "Navy Bill," and do signify that in him they do place all their hopes for a result to glorify the dedication.

The Coming of the Juggernaut

Then comes the great juggernaut of Purdue rumbling down from the north on the precarious Monon, and the carriages of the thing are painted hopefully in vain desire to bring about victory.

The northern legions swarm from their stronghold as they do set out to take our place by storm, but they do find soon that such a move would be quite impractical, and the decision is that energy must be released in wild cheerings.

The Rival Music Men

Vanguard of the Enemy

So peacefully they do pass through the village streets, a motley array of misguided ones they are, firm in their belief in the omnipotence of the drab orange and the cheerless black.

Out they come to the very gates of the seminary with derision in their honest hearts, but they do contain themselves and save their strength for the greater business of the afternoon.

The Union of Music

And at the field of the fray there rests before the scoring board a huge football in gay surroundings, and there is an air of mystery that does hang over the whole of the arrangement.

Soldiers guard the Shrine

And maids file down the field

Bursting forth from this great symbol of the game there comes a fairy maiden, the queen of the wee folk, and she does step daintily upon the field, well attended by great numbers of the lesser wee folk.

And the maiden does invoke a pretty blessing alike upon both the teams, for i' faith, she does feel that the both of them must strain their might unto the utmost to avoid the sting of sore defeat.

The Invocation

The Altar of Chance

Then there does come the master of the ceremonies, and he does call the leaders of the rivals to his side, and instructs them to place their hopes on the altar of Chance in the flipping of a coin for first advantage.

The Big Parade

The enemy band struts in ostentatious pride down the length of the ground of battle, and blows spirited and challenging tunes to bolster up the spirits of the visitors that have gathered themselves in groups.

The sounds and scenes must not be lost, and a sturdy group of messengers perch themselves high above the crowds, in order that they may pass on the revelry to a world that waits expectantly for the tidings.

Silent Messengers

Futility

At last, after a long and fruitless warfare, there comes a thrilling play in the closing moments, but all to naught, for the master does assert that the Indiana warrior had overstepped his bound, and so the struggle ends.

So the great day is over, the revelers are gone, the place filled such a short while ago with merrymaking is silent, and the winking lights of the town shine solemnly over tired folk who slumber peacefully.

The Captains and the Kings depart

Thoughts turn to other things, to work, to art, and things of beauty, and the good people of the seminary climb down to live again the lives of the ghost folk of the past.

"Sister Beatrice"

On an Errand of Mercy

And the maidens do play at the work of nuns as they do express themselves in the drama, rescuing the souls of soiled ones, who take the part in order that the play of life may be presented.

And the knights revel once more in the days of their youth when they did play at the game of blood and romance, and they feel great joy in the mimicry of the lust for blood which they must put down in the gentle days of the present.

"Taming of the Shrew"

Research of the Phi Gams

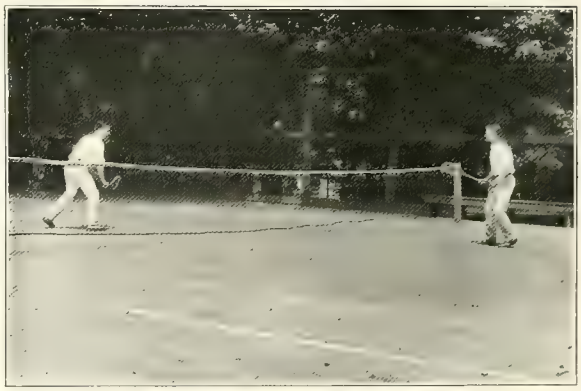

And other knights, less inspired by the urge to art, do return to the divers modes of passing the time, and some of them do play at tables and toss small bits of cards about in great glee.

Scotchmen in repose

There are those, too, who hie forth at the first call of the spring birds to knock about a small ball upon the greensward, and to strive to emulate their great predecessors of the Scottish game.

And others go into the forest upon a smooth place and bat a ball across a net, deriving much pleasure and exercise therefrom, as if their life did really depend upon it.

The game of Tennis

Maidens disport—

While the maidens frolic on the fresh meadow in divers games that they may enjoy the beauty and life-giving breath of the springtime, and at the same time to furnish amusement for the disconsolate knights of the Seventh Road.

Manly sports they do play, and hit a hard ball that they may dash around the diamond in desperate effort to win games for their classes, and to bask in the sunshine of April.

—at the great game

The aesthetes flutter forth with the advent of the growing month of May, and dance about, all bedecked with pale garlands of flowers wild, dedicated to a beauty that many may appreciate.

The Aesthetes

Sprites fluttering on the green

Not alone do they dance, for there are times when the sprites appear in numbers very great, a motley crew of lithe gracefulness and appealing loveliness to all those that do behold them.

Then comes their queen, the most majestic of them all, and they do pay most humble homage unto her, and do crown her with wreaths of more than passing sweetness, a very striking queen she is.

Queen of the May

The Throne Room

And the sprites do clutter about her woodland throne to shower dainty petals at her feet in their reverence, a fitting tribute to the best of queens, and ever fitting at that time when the whole earth is born again.

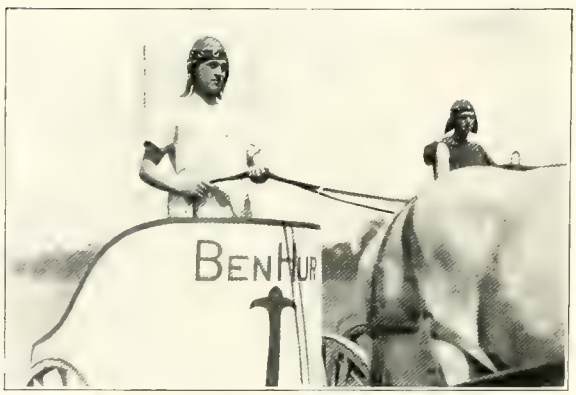

A different aspect

With the awakening of the year there does come always the blare and grime of the circus to distract the campus world from the distasteful tomes, and youths do array themselves in wondrous raiment to take a part.

And the chariots thunder about the track behind the wild-eared steeds, while the good charioteers risk the proverbial life and limb to furnish amusement to the thirsty crowd.

Winning by two noses!

Ben Hur himself—

The race is over, and the bold drivers posé before the picturer that their deeds may be immortalized, and Ben Hur stands proudly before the gaping onlookers, serene in the knowledge of his prowess.

Perhaps it is a Caesar that does stand so determinedly, for it matters little that he met defeat when that defeat was met in a glorious way that will bring fame and honor to him for many generations.

—and Caesar not himself

And other gallants do prepare themselves for a race on the back of a horse, and the derby days live with us again, as these brave men do jockey their steeds about, impatient for the race to be on.

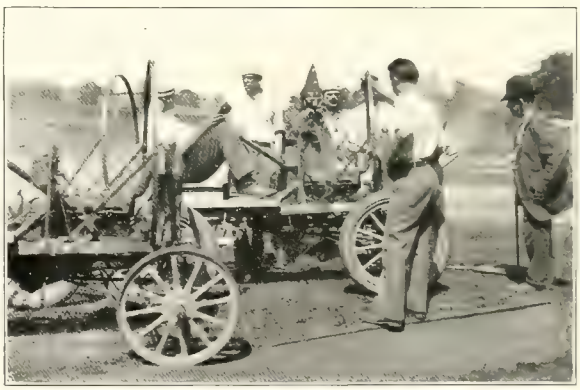

The Polo Match

The Derby—

The race is on, and the riders gallop right madly around the track, each one of them eager to clasp the hand of an elusive and much coveted victory, but the race remains in doubt until the end, so hard is it run.

To more modern ways of defying the grim hand of death do some of the daring ones turn, to the dangerous sport of polo with light motor carriages, terrifying to look upon, and methinks terrifying to sit within.

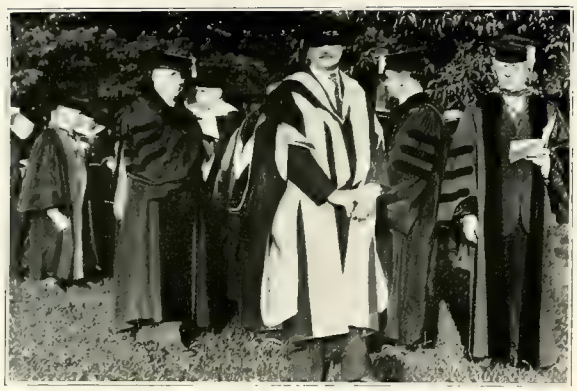

And Circus Cars

With Antics of the Clowns

No circus is completed without the antics of the clown who disports himself to relieve any monotony that might come as a reaction to the dangers of the great events that hold the attention of the crowds from time to time.

Commencement Day

So to the day when the great scholar comes to start the fledgelings forth into this comedy of existence with wise words of advice and warning concerning the conduct of one's personal existence.

And the great parade winds sadly over the sighing grasses toward the final ceremony when so many of the great scholars of the place do sing their song of the swan, as far as their campus days shall reckon.

The Winding Line of March

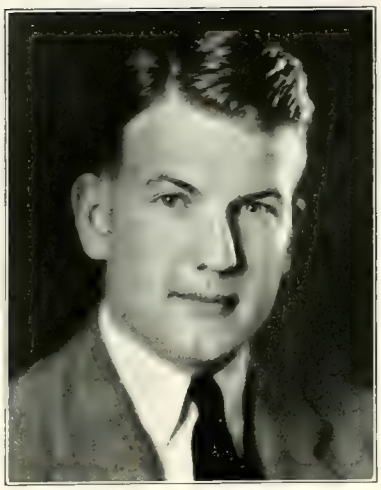

And to the end, when the unfortunate ones prepare to cast away their robes of dignity, and start down the great white highway that sparkles in the spring sun of our youth and fades away in the soft haze of a beautiful future.

The 1926 Arbutus

The portrayal of the worth-while things on the campus of Indiana University has been the motive of the 1926 ARBUTUS. We have worked to reveal the true Indiana spirit as it has displayed itself throughout the year—the Indiana that develops citizenship and strength of character.

To us, THE ARBUTUS IS INDIANA! We have felt that ours has been a high duty. Years hence we will have forgotten all the detail that to us now seems gigantic and determining. The school that we knew will have grown beyond all present dimensions. A new school will have arisen, greater in mortar and stone. The remaining and constant element will be the continued infusion of ideals, and the directing of paths toward values of life.

It has been our attempt to unfold this spirit, knowing that in the distant future it will be the most treasured reminder of our college years.

The ARBUTUS is the oldest living tradition of the Indiana campus, the first book appearing in 1894, a literary publication with few features. The present annual is the thirty-second volume to be issued and represents the progress which has come with the years.

The prestige that has been realized has come through a mutual endeavor and fine spirit extending beyond the work of the staffs. The last few years has seen the entire University co-operating for the production of a better book.

In this present edition of the ARBUTUS we are particularly indebted to the following:

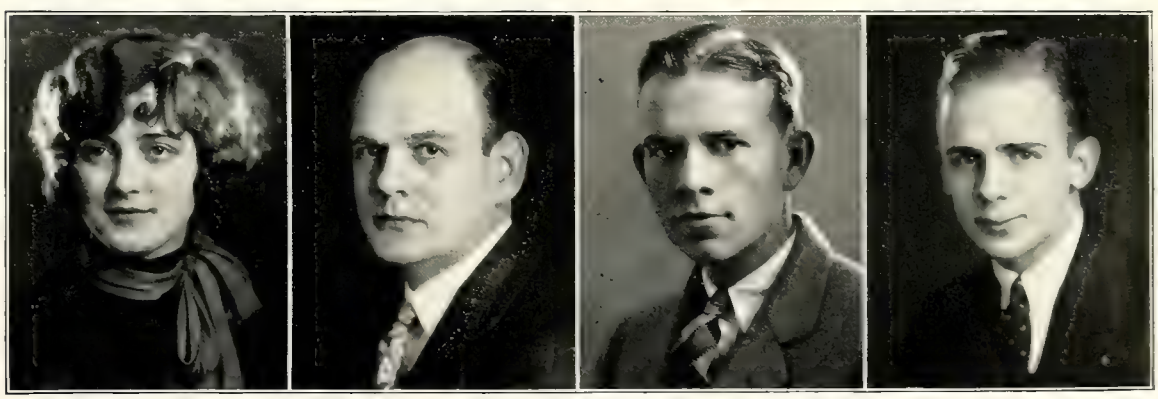

Mr. Munday and Mr. Benham, of the Bookwalter-Ball-Greathouse Printing Company, whose constant counsels have been indispensable in the creation of art printing.

Mr. Worley, of the Indianapolis Engraving Company, for development of suggestions in color work and engravings.

Mr. D. Dwight Sinclair for studio and commercial photography.

David J. Molloy Company for the distinctive cover.

The University officials for their consideration at every step in the work throughout the year.

The Indiana Daily Student

The Indiana Daily Student has grown from an unostentatious fortnightly magazine to a firmly established four to eight-page, seven-column, metropolitan newspaper in its sixty years of existence. This year, more than ever before, it has been the policy of the editors to deviate from the usual "campus sheet" type to that of a real city newspaper.

G. Dallas Newton is the new faculty supervisor and general head of the staff, replacing Dale Cox. Mr. Newton is not only a former editor of The Student, but was also the editor-in-chief of an ARBUTUS. For several years he has worked for the Indianapolis News.

The actual staff consists entirely of students in the department of journalism. To Floyd Edwards, the editor-in-chief for the first semester, and to Paul Thompson, the editor-in-chief for the second semester, must be attributed much of The Student's success during the past school year.

The editorial policy of The Student has never been clearly defined because no burning questions have seemed to merit special attack or support (or else faculty watchfulness has stifled every such attempt). The basic policy, however, that all editors have recognized, has been the advocation of a greater Indiana University in the various fields of its endeavor. To this ideal The Daily Student has consistently worked and has been loyal.

The Vagabond

The Vagabond, Indiana's literary magazine, appears on the campus five times during the school year, barring faculty supervision, bill collectors, fire, flood and acts of God. Through its essays, satires and criticisms, it has attracted national attention during its three years of existence. By good fortune and agility, the editors have produced a publication on the order of those of Mencken and Haskell—and have gotten away with it. Edmund Bierwagon served as editor during the past year, taking the place of Phil Rice, who was responsible for its existence until that time.

The Red Book

The organ of the Y. M. C. A., the Students' Bible, and various names have been given the directory that each fall is gotten out by two aspiring young men. Concretely, it gives first hand information that is very valuable to the student. There is extreme originality of each year's publication. Each editor has his own style, and practically the whole year must be used before the reader can understand or fathom the editor's key, after which there is nothing difficult about finding the desired information.

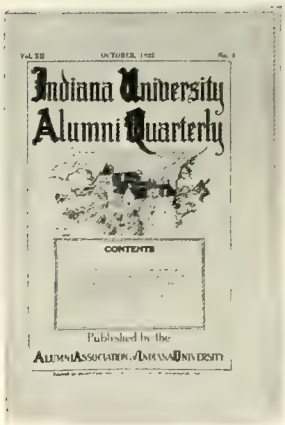

Maurice Gronendyke and Ralph Cooper guided it from a mass of students' names and information, until it was offered for sale in the present compact little volume this year.

The Alumni Quarterly

Published four times a year, the Alumni Quarterly is the official informative organ of the vast hordes of Indiana's alumni. It has been issued since 1913, and, from pamphlet form, has grown to be a weighty magazine of some 200 pages. It is made up at the Publications Office under the direct supervision of Miss Ivy Chamness, head of the University Publications. The Quarterly is sent to all corners of the globe.

Among the many interesting features of the magazine are articles by prominent alumni and faculty men, notes as to the location and occupation of the various class members, notices of births, deaths and marriages. The more important items of The Daily Student and the Alumnus are incorporated in the Quarterly, especially those pertaining to administrative changes and improvements of buildings.

The establishment of the Alumni Quarterly is a part of the movement of the graduates to keep in closer contact with the University. Copies of each issue are sent to all members of the Alumni Association, graduates becoming initiated into the said association on the annual payment of two dollars and a half. About 1,200 copies are printed every three months. William Misener Adkins has charge of the distribution and keeps accurate record of all changes of address of those to whom the Quarterly is sent.

The Indiana Alumnus

The weekly outburst from the office of the Alumni Secretary which keeps the alumni, who are eagerly waiting, informed on happenings of the University and surroundings, is The Indiana Alumnus. Every week of the year, this connecting link between the campus and the old home town is mailed out to tell the waiting world all about the campus. What it may tell is rather a hard thing to answer.

To the more initiated, The Alumnus is a condensed form of the University Sheet, for after each issue has been thrown on the market, one copy is kept and carefully culled by the Secretary and his co-laborers to glean the news from its columns. When enough has been marked "Alumnus" by Hewins, assistant editor, the paper is ready for press, and consequently is published and edited.

Edward Von Tress, former Alumni Secretary, resigned at the opening of the fall term this year. For a brief time after his departure, the department was taken over by W. A. Alexander, who with the help of Kenneth Hewins, kept a regular issue going. Later, George ("Dixie") Heighway was selected as Secretary, and The Alumnus goes on as before.

One thing belonging peculiarly to The Alumnus is the back page on which long graduated grads and ex's tell how glad they are to send in their regular installment to the Memorial Fund. We have failed to discover if this is suggestive advertising or really above board mail received.

University Library

The University Library puts into the hands of students more than 850 books every day, and the large study room it contains is used by two or three times that many persons.

One hundred and seventy thousand volumes, with a current annual acquisition of 7,000 volumes, are marshaled for the ready use of all students under the direction of W. A. Alexander and his assistants.

With the completion of the Library Annex, the capacity in study rooms and stacks will be approximately doubled. Better facilities can be obtained. The library has many valuable and complete collections of books on various subjects. Rare editions on many books add to the comprehensiveness of the files.

University Book Store

The bookstore is one of the busiest parts of Indiana University. For the past year it has been located between Owen and Maxwell Halls. It is soon to have a permanent home in the new addition to the library. The services of the store to the students are numerous. Student mail is handled by a branch postoffice; textbooks and school supplies are sold on the closest margin. It is also an agency for University publications, and furnishes employment for some students. It is estimated that the bookstore saves the students from $25,000 to $35,000 a year. Ward G. Biddle, '16, took over the management in August, 1923. Mr. Biddle has been highly successful in the administration of the store.

Minor Publications

The Indiana Athletic Review

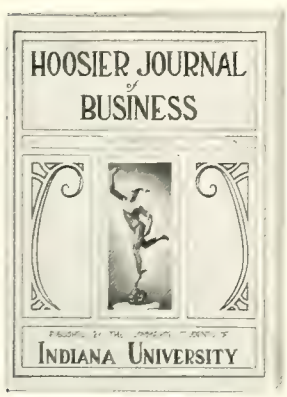

The Indiana University Song Book

Aside from the publications that have already been mentioned in the preceding pages, there are several other magazines and booklets that help to hold the average of alma mater above water. Among these are the University Bulletin, The Hoosier Journal of Business, W. S. G. A. Song Book, and The Indiana Athletic Review. Yet others are The Whirlwind, The Freshman Guide, University Studies, and the News Letter. From time to time these divers publications are presented to the campus and alumni, containing digestive and undigestive material of the school at large, or particular departments therein.

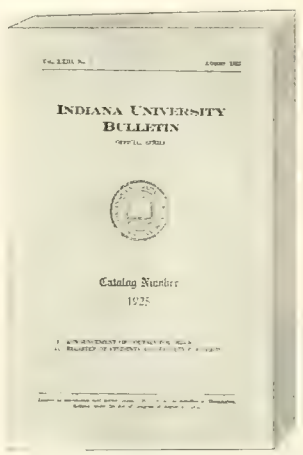

Perhaps the work that is most widely read and distributed is the Bulletin. It is a massive volume of some five hundred pages, and is a catalogue of all courses offered for the current year. Here are listed all members of the faculty, arranged in order of their rank. Histories, descriptions and general statements of each school are given so that the incoming student may be well acquainted with the school that he is entering.

Struggling upward through the maze came this year The Hoosier Journal of Business. It is the voice of the Commerce School, tuned by the commercialistic Mutz, editor. There are indications that this magazine will soon rank among the best publications of its kind in the state. The first issue contained an article by Herbert Hoover. It is planned from time to time to solicit other leaders in the field of commerce to write articles for the magazine.

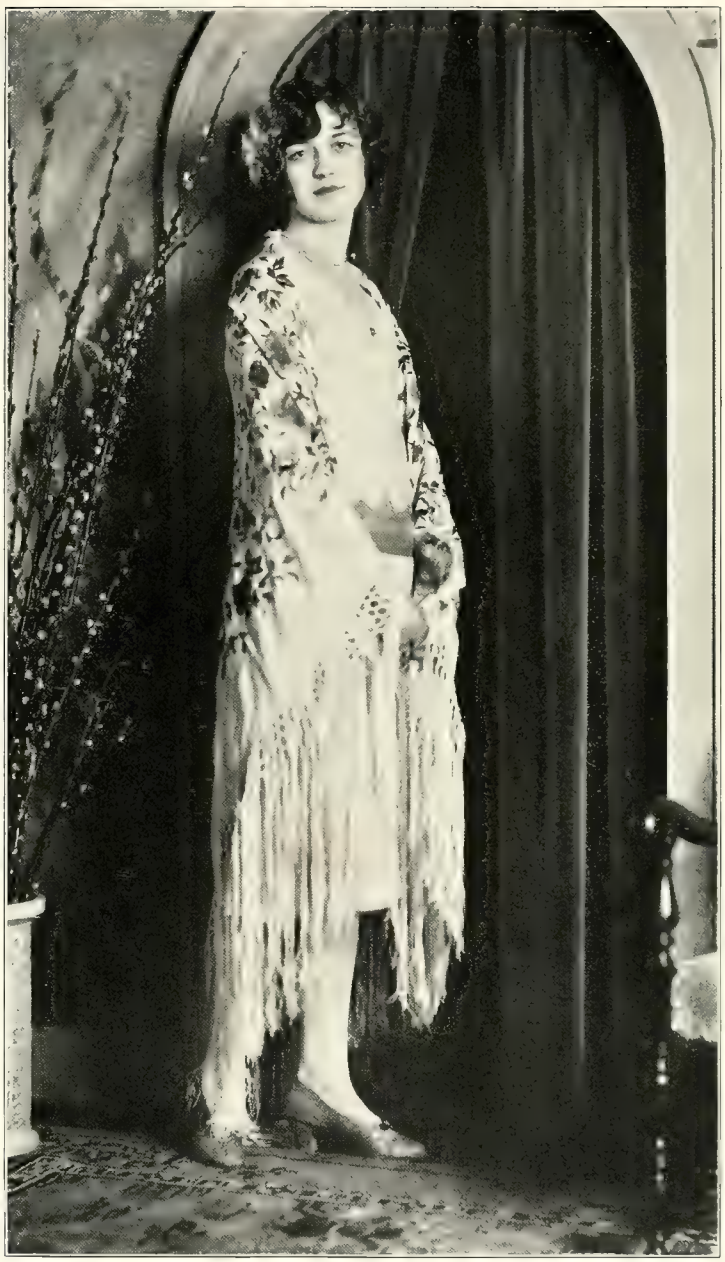

The Indiana Athletic Review reports the progress of the various sports, particularly football. It is published through the office of Frank R. Elliott, Director of Publicity.

Carl Tuttle
Director

Jordan River Revue

The Jordan River Revue of 1926 was in many respects one of the most elaborate revues that has ever been produced at Indiana. Its director, Carl Tuttle, spared no pains in perfecting its organization, and by help of scenic effects and careful selection of cast, the production was greeted with great enthusiasm by its audiences.

The plot was substantial enough to furnish an excellent vehicle for the cast, which was headed by William Romey and Mildred Legge. Charles Miles and Ivan Boxell were excellent in character work.

The lyrics were more sophisticated musically than the ones used in 1925, and their composition was chiefly in the hands of William Fox and Helen Hinkle. Words were contributed by Ed Oliver.

In brief, the revue well may rank with the most successful of former years.

The Junior Prom

Fred Hunt, Chairman

Indiana's supreme social event of the year, the Junior Prom, was given over this year to the Charleston and the "sock time" dancing by the six hundred couples which crowded the Men's Gymnasium, April 16, for the big event. Frank Trumbauer's eleven-piece orchestra, of St. Louis, provided the music. For the one night, the University authorities allowed this form of dance to dominate.

The grand march, led by Miss June Bolinger, Prom Queen, and Paul Tobin, junior president, marked the beginning of the event. The gymnasium was beautifully decorated in the style of a Japanese flower garden.

The Junior Prom Committee, appointed by Tobin, junior president, was composed of Fred Hunt, chairman, George Kidd, Mildred Legge, Walter Bolton, Byron Moore, Ruth Briggs and William Bray.

The Sophomore Cotillion

On the momentous night of March 5, scores of couples danced at the new Masonic Temple to the wild strains of the Paramount Orchestra, of Chicago, in the annual Sophomore Cotillion. Unique in many respects, the Cotillion this year heralded a new era in the terpsichorean history of Indiana University. It marked a rejuvenation of the step which was about to become obsolete through the concentrated efforts of officials to stop the Charleston in University buildings endangered by it.

Financially, the dance maintained the standards so long set for the more prominent campus social functions. Members of the class discovered later to have been responsible for the affair were John Veatch, chairman; Henry Claywell, Jack Biel, Gretchen Haig, Reece Stigler, Mary Jane Walters, and Robert McCord.

The Freshman Ball

The Freshman Ball, annual dance of the first year class, was held at the Student Building Friday night, February 13. Held at a time when it was never certain whether a dance would last until the end, the freshmen conducted themselves successfully and the dance went on to the close. Ross Franklin's Orchestra provided the music for the event.

By the work of the freshmen, most of whom were well accustomed to labor, the Student Building was colorfully decorated. The attendance was one of the largest that had attended a dance up to that time. The dance committee, under Maurice Hockett, chairman, made careful arrangements for the event, aided by Robert Huncilman, freshman class president. The dance was informal. Dr. and Mrs. J. E. P. Holland, Mrs. Kate Roberts, Alice Pfaff, Frieda Stengel, Mrs. L. M. Kirby, and Mrs. Ella Woodward chaperoned the affair. This was the first of the series of class dances of the year to be held.

Men's Glee Club

The Men's Glee Club makes its thirty-second bow on the pages of the ARBUTUS with a membership of fifty-two, directed this year by D. D. Nye. The Glee Club is one of Indiana's most popular institutions, and, according to those who have watched its progress, marks a true contribution to tradition this year.

The club made its first appearance at convocation December 16. From March 29-April 9, thirty-two members made the annual spring tour, singing in twelve towns in northern Indiana. The tour included Lebanon, Frankfort, Kokomo, Logansport, Rensselaer, Hammond, Gary, Michigan City, Mishawaka, Elkhart, Goshen and Fort Wayne.

Women's Glee Club

The Women's Glee Club, under the direction of Prof. John L. Geiger, this year completed one of the most successful seasons in the history of the organization. Composed of thirty-nine girls with the best voices, chosen from the University Chorus, the group practiced steadily, presenting as one of the features of the year's program "The Legend of Belentz," by Bendell, at convocation. This presentation followed the custom of giving an oratorio or cantata before the student body at least once each year. Concerts were also given throughout the season.

Dean B. W. Merrill

University Orchestra

The University Orchestra is composed of students in advanced musical work, and of some faculty members, all selected by Dean B. W. Merrill of the School of Music, and under his direction. Practices are held regularly, and two hours' credit is given for the work. The chief appearances of the orchestra are at convocation and playing at University events.

The music for the orchestra comes from the extensive library of the School of Music. Concert programs include selections from operas, mezzos, and some original compositions by advanced students in music. Faithful attendance at practices is a by-word, one member of the orchestra having missed only one practice in more than two and one-half years. The orchestra this year is considered as one of the best in a number of years.

Lee R. Norvelle
Coach

Early last fall the Indiana University debating squad, directed by Coaches Norvelle and Cohen, defeated the Cambridge University team from Cambridge, England. The subject, which was argued affirmatively by the local orators, was, "Resolved, That This House Favors the Principles of Prohibition." The decision was rendered by the audience, 445 standing for Indiana and 165 for Cambridge. The largest crowd ever in attendance at a debate here witnessed the discussion.

Donald E. Bowen, Ernest L. Myers and Jasper V. Garland comprised the local team. Patrick A. Devlin, John D. Lloyd and G. V. Ramsey represented the English school. Each speaker was allowed twelve minutes for constructive argument and each team was given six minutes for rebuttal.

Coed debating, after several years of doubt, has at last won a permanent place in the activities of the University. The coed team is now a member of a coed debating league, known as the Indiana-Michigan-Ohio League, which includes the universities of these three states. The results for the league this year were: Indiana, 1; Ohio State, 2; Michigan, 0. In addition to these debates, the two teams appeared before the Women's Civic Club at Indianapolis.

George W. Talbot served as cadet-colonel during the first semester. Four years of work in the department won for him the honor of commanding the regiment on the various occasions during the fall term. Leo W. Military Department

The United States has emphasized the value of our national defense on our campus in the form of the Indiana University R. O. T. C. This is an expression that the future strength of our nation's defense lies in the education of our thinking men in the universities. We derive a definite educational benefit, a health engendering physical promotion, and the addition of a particular finish to our mental culture in this process of training and being trained. Some gain self-control and discipline, punctuality and regularity of movement, mental alertness and the charm of correct physical bearing in this endeavor, which depends upon the unified mass action to a common end. There is also a deep undercurrent of well pronounced moral advantages which arise in contemplation of future patriotic service to the nation's call, and we are now in the process of preparation to assume these possible obligations when they will be both intrinsically and extrinsically productive. This is one of the primary responsibilities of the male citizens of any nation on earth.

Instructional Staff—Harris, McCormick, Cleaver, Crea, Rupert, Kennedy, Blizzard, Gibson

The staff of officers stationed here seem to maintain their obliging energy and unusual enthusiasm for their tasks of instruction, which is eloquent evidence of their fine spirit. The regular army personnel for Indiana University R. O. T. C. this year includes Major Harry B. Crea, Captains S. Y. Kennedy, John W. McCormick, G. C. Cleaver, J. C. Blizzard, A. K. Rupert, Technical Sergeant George Harris, and Sergeant S. B. Gibson. Yes, they are the "Gymnasium Gang," but patiently and successfully they watch student generations come and go, and do for each succeeding class what they can to get gradually the recalcitrant cadets molded into a smooth working machine.

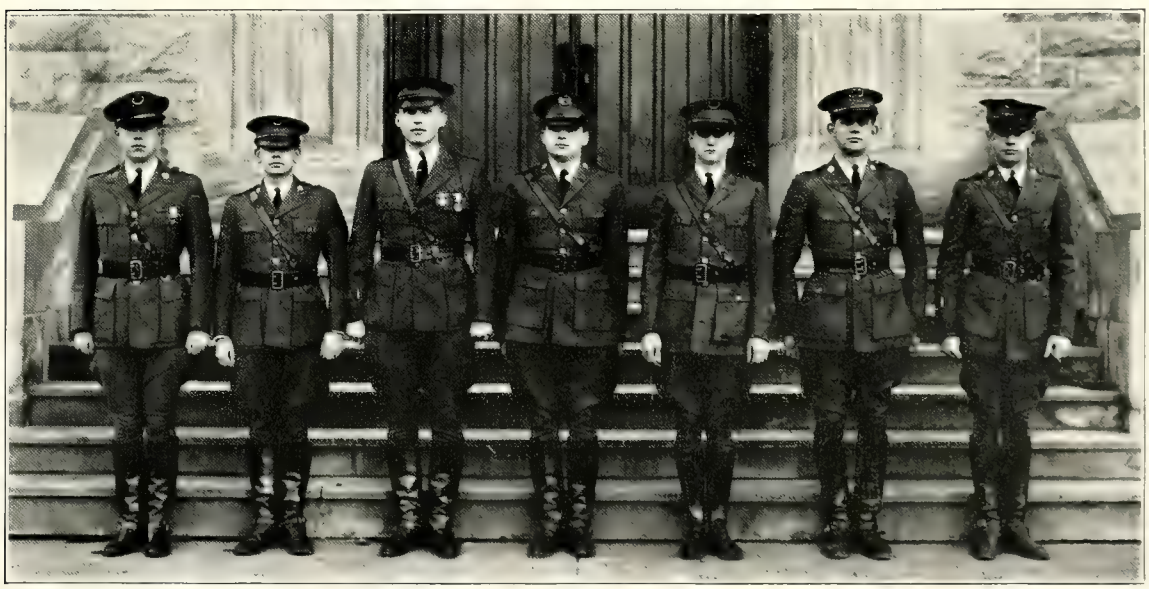

More than a thousand students are now taking part in the regular manoeuvers, to the strident call of "left, right, left" by embryonic officers who have successfully completed a two-year course toting a Springfield, and who seem now to take delight in watching the less fortunate underclassmen go through the "I. D. R."

After this two-year course of instruction a student may elect to take a two-year advanced course and become a cadet officer with three hours of general credit, certain substantial emoluments for service rendered, and the chance to aspire to a reserve commission if sufficient proficiency is developed. The advanced students must take a six-weeks' training course at Camp Knox during the summer, during which they put into practice their text-book theories.

The Military Department exists for the necessity of having a soldiery at least partially trained, to crystallize the ideas of youth as to citizenship and patriotism, physical and mental possibilities of development, and an attempt at the formation of habits of regularity, promptness and courtesy.

Paul E. Tombaugh
Assistant Coach Rifle Team

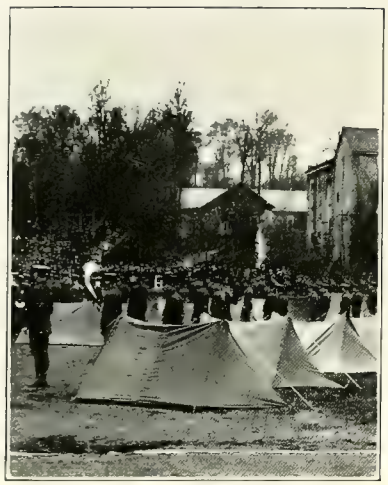

Rifle marksmanship is an established military feature at Indiana University. The entry into the Big Ten Rifle League as a university team, rather than an R. O. T. C. team, has marked a great step in its development. Despite a cramped range, due to inadequate storage space, and crowded class schedules, the individual members have worked hard in practice, and collectively form one of the best teams in the Conference.

In the five Big Ten meets held, Indiana's team has been victorious, counting among those vanquished Illinois, Iowa, Northwestern, and Wisconsin. The team has an average which is a credit to any similar team in the country. By means of night firing, it has been possible to organize a girls' team which is both representative and expert.

Captain Cleaver has been the coach for the last two years, and deserves a great deal of credit for the team's success. The captain of the team is Elmer T. Laws, who has received two sweaters for previous service on the squad. The personnel is as follows: R. Burroughs, R. Hurly, G. N. Rardin, O. J. Smith, C. C. Engleman, C. S. Laubscher, C. T. Laffland, W. T. Lash, W. Rinehart, H. E. Coffey, P. Carpenter, R. A. Winston, and F. L. Spencer.

Armistice Day

At two p. m., Wednesday, November the eleventh, a reverent group of students, faculty, and townspeople gathered at the Bloomington square to do honor to those who had died in the World War. Soldiers of three wars were present, Civil War veterans, Spanish-American War veterans, and soldiers of the late war, all intent on doing honor to those who had fallen.

A long parade, with several branches of the service represented, marched through the down-town streets to the music furnished by the Bloomington band and the Indiana University Military Band led by John Ellis, drum major. When the crowd had gathered on the south side of the square, Brigadier-General William G. Everson delivered the address of the day. An able orator, he sounded the gratitude of thousands of countrymen in his commemoratory speech. The entire R. O. T. C. unit participated in the ceremonies, this being the only time during the first semester that the companies paraded as a body.

Camp Knox

Firing a one-pounder

The dust of commencement activities scarcely settles until forty or fifty of Indiana's cadet officers, with three years of the theory of Military Science and Tactics behind them, embark for Camp Knox to mingle with the cadets from other universities in the initiation into the tactical use and possibilities of the Infantry. They spend six weeks illustrating practical problems of map and terrain designed to provide the student officers with real field conditions, going through command exercise, firing on the range, parading, manoeuvering, and hiking over dusty roads. From the stories that return from the summer camps, the aspiring officers get a bit of Flanders fields and of Burma presented in a most realistic and practical fashion. It must all be quite enjoyable and the cadet's hopes rise in wild contemplation, for the hardened soldiers return with a distinct impression of a good time, a light heart, their heads in the clouds, and the mien of a conqueror.

Indiana's Band

Designated this year as "one of the snappiest marching and playing college bands" by John Philip Sousa, Indiana's Military Band marched through intricate formations throughout the year, bringing fame and praise for a hitherto unnoticed aggregation who played three or four numbers with more or less halting difficulty.

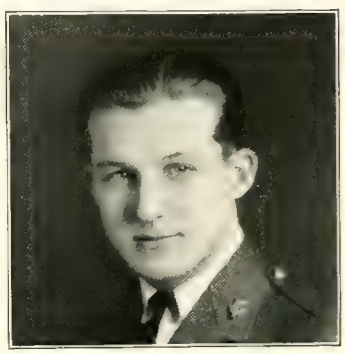

New and brilliant equipment made the band an organization ready to hold its own against any other college band. Its repertoire, increased by late song hits and marching tunes, the rendering of which has been conceded perfect, was enjoyed at each appearance of the musicians.

Sherwood Blue
Cadet-Major Band

Long hours of tutelage under the supervision of Director Mark Hindsley and Assistant-Director Nelson Davis, combined with the formations as executed by Major Blue, have done much to bring the band to its present perfective state.

Phi Delta Phi is a high legal fraternity, whose membership is based, supposedly, upon scholarship. Converts are first given the acid test of faculty recommendation, after which they may lessen their arduous work and slide home saturated in the wet cloud of their glory. Foster chapter was founded at Indiana in 1900, appearing thirty-one years after the formation of the organization at Michigan.

Alpha Chi Sigma, national fraternity for neophyte chemists, first effervesced at Indiana in the year 1907. Following this initial outburst, the organization has, much after the fashion of hydrogen sulphide, won its way to the hearts of the student body by its radio activity. (That was a damp analogy.) Nevertheless, the purpose as constitutionally set forth is to develop chemical research and application among the members. Toward this end they work diligently and faithfully.

Phi Delta Kappa is a professional education fraternity with established chapters in the leading universities and colleges of the United States. In its nature it presents three aspects: namely, the professional, the fraternal, and the honorary. The purpose of the fraternity is to support the highest educational ideals and to encourage the principles underlying American education. It elects to membership only those men who are of sound moral character and of recognized professional training and ability and who are engaged in the scientific study of education. It seeks to ennoble and dignify the profession of teaching and to render the results of training and fitness of real benefit to humanity. To this end it endeavors to make three ideals dynamic in itself as an organization and in the lives of its members. The ideals are research, service, and leadership.

If Washington were living he would be an Aeon, so say the campus gods. Perhaps the signal achievement of the group this year was the proposed election system. After being proposed, the students en masse proposed to lay the idea on the table. Suggestive editorials in The Student lent assistance to the plan.

There are, however, many secretive and determining acts made by the organization. Their work is withheld from publicity as much as possible, thus keeping the campus in wonder most of the time.

Garrick Club, pseudo-dramatic organization, boasts a large membership. Under the dominating guidance of William Romey, the Club has attempted to do bigger and better things this year—with success as you take it. The true spirit of the organization was revealed in a touching incident during a meeting at the Sigma Kappa house last fall. D. C. O.

With all the beauty running rampant at Indiana, it is considered a high honor to make Pleiades. Since 1921 the organization has taken into its fold a limited number of the more eligible. The pin represents six of the seven Pleiads of mythology. Which means that one Pleiad is lost. It is felt that the percentage has increased this year.

The membership roll of Sphinx Club would look time worn and moth eaten if the names of those hurriedly graduated were taken from it. Leaving between suns has been characteristic of the activity of the members this year. Only the constructive guidance of the good president has kept the majority of the boys in the straight and narrow thus far.

The objective purpose of this sophomore society is to see that every freshman is be-capped in green throughout the year. Two members from each fraternity are condemned to Skull and Crescent every fall—conviction coming during initiation. D. C. O.

Westminster Foundation

Dr. C. W. Harris

This marks the thirteenth year of the extending influence of the Westminster Foundation on the Indiana University campus. Started here in 1912 by the Presbyterian Board of Christian Education, its purpose was to furnish a bond to hold Presbyterian students of the University in direct contact with their church.

The Westminster Foundation gives social life, group consciousness and religious training to all students interested in the organization. Directed by a leader and counsellor living at the Westminster Inn, student activities under the auspices of the Presbyterian Church are planned and carried out.

Arthur L. Miller, I. U. class of '22, is the present student counsellor at the Westminster House, filling the place of Dr. C. W. Harris, now on a year's leave of absence studying in Mansfield College, Oxford, England. Miss Elsie Gardner is the hostess of the Westminster Inn.

At the Freshman party at the Westminster Inn last September, sixty-three were initiated. The five other annual special entertainments given at the Westminster Inn are the Hallowe'en party, the Christmas party, the Twelfth Night entertainment and the Valentine party.

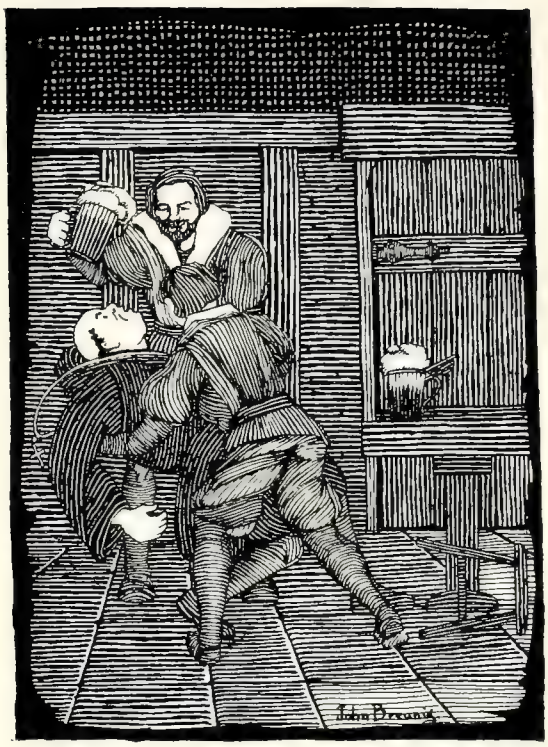

Dr. Harris began his work at the Westminster Foundation in 1912, succeeding Dr. Thomas White, the first student leader and counsellor at Westminster House.

Home Economics Club

In the belief of our forefathers, woman's place was in the home, and her business to know how to cook and sew. Modernism has very largely displaced this idea, but still a number are interested in these arts. The Home Economics Club is an organization of the department interested in knowing better how to do these things.

Physics Club

The interests of physics are the interests of the Physics Club. It is composed of advanced students and of the faculty of the department. Meetings are held every two weeks, at which discussions of the subject are held. Special papers and reports from the advanced students or members of the faculty are usually on the program.

Additional Clubs

An organization for everyone, and more than one for nearly everyone, seems to be the general slogan on the campus pertaining especially to the clubs and departmental activities. In each school, department, and division, there are numerous organizations of both social and instructive types. A great many are listed in this book, some have been omitted.

Among the organizations are the Demurrer Club, the Spanish Club, Omicron Nu, Chi Delta Chi, Chi Gamma Tau, Travellers' Club, and the Marquette Club.

Chi Gamma Tau is a fraternity of the University band, devoted to the stimulation of interest in advanced band work. For a number of years there was agitation for recognition of work done by bandsmen, which resulted in the foundation of this organization last year.

The past year has noted, temporarily at least, a passing of the Spanish Club. For almost ten years there had existed an organization of students studying Spanish, holding meetings in the interest of their work, but at the beginning of the present year, interest seemed absent and the club disbanded.

The Travellers' Club, boasting one of the oldest and largest organizations of its kind on the campus, is composed of Masons. One or two banquets are usually held by the club each year.

One of the biggest meetings of the Demurrer Club was held in March in the form of a banquet, at which Governor Ed Jackson was present and addressed the gathering, which was open to everyone.

Residence Hall

Residence Hall was erected in the summer of 1906 by Colonel T. J. Louden and, although used as a barracks by the Student Army Training Corps during the world war, it is holding up well under the strain of housing 114 coeds. Residence Hall was known as Alpha Hall until after the war, when it was christened with its present title. Miss Florence Bond, former social director, has moved to the new dormitory, and Miss Frieda Herbst was installed as social director of Residence Hall.

Last year complete suites of new furniture were placed in the study rooms. New draperies have been put in all the rooms this year, and the removal of the office to Memorial Hall has made room for another living room on the first floor. The study rooms are double and there are two suites of two rooms each on the second and third floors. Telephone service to Residence Hall was changed last fall to come over the Memorial Hall switchboard. Meals are planned by Miss MacDonald, dietitian for both Residence and Memorial Halls.

House officers are elected each year by the girls, and house meetings are held regularly. The Residence Hall annual formal dance and the dinner dance given each year in the spring are traditional affairs.

Memorial Hall

With the dedication of the Women's Memorial Dormitory on November 20, 1925, Indiana's dream of an ideal women's hall was realized. The dedicatory exercises took place before an audience of two thousand persons, including alumnae, guests, faculty, friends, and students of Indiana University. Dean Agnes E. Wells presided over the ceremonies. Mrs. Sanford Teter, Mrs. Virginia Meredith, President Bryan, Judge Ira C. Batman, and John C. Bolenbacher, architect, spoke to the audience. A large iron key, symbolizing the realization of the dreams of those who have worked for the edifice, was presented to the dormitory committee by Mr. Bolenbacher.

Memorial Hall is constructed entirely of Indiana limestone, is roofed in gray slate, and is fireproof. The central tower which divides the building into two separate wings has four turrets, symbolic of recreation, education, service, and prayer. The round bronze plate in the center of the entrance stands for the three ways in which women aided in the World War; the signal corps, the Y. W. C. A., and the Red Cross.

The hall houses approximately a hundred women in each wing. Erected at a cost of $300,000, it is modern in every detail. Each wing is complete in itself, having separate dining rooms, parlors, offices, and sleeping quarters.

South Hall

Indiana University's only dormitory for men is located north of the campus facing the stadium and golf links. The building, completed last year, is the first of the units that will form housing accommodations for five hundred men. The present wing forms the south unit, and because of this fact the structure has been designated South Hall.

The building itself is constructed of variegated Indiana limestone, typical of the new buildings being erected on the campus. It was built by the Ostrom Realty Company of Indianapolis. The kitchen and dining room are located on the ground floor and the lobby is located on the second floor. The rooms are arranged to take care of two men, with all furniture furnished by the dormitory.

The dormitory has accommodations for one hundred and ten men, about sixty per cent of whom are freshmen. A house organization is maintained and a definite social program carried out. The organization encourages participation in intramural athletics and the various activities of the campus.

The Hall is conducted under the able management of Miss Alice McDonald, the director of the Commons Department. The general life of the Hall is supervised by Mrs. Kate Roberts, the house mother.

College Hall

The latest addition to the already mounting number of women's dormitories is College Hall, which was started last fall to take the place of the former Co-operative House on Kirkwood avenue. The house takes care of seventeen coeds and is filled to capacity at all times. The President Bryan home at 812 North College avenue is the present location of the Hall.

Due to the distance from the campus, only two meals are served each day, the girls being required to get lunch near the campus. The plan of organization for the house is much the same as that carried on by the previous Co-operative House, the girls taking over all executive reins under the supervision of Miss Edna Mallott, social director.

House officers for this year are: Ruby Randolph, president; Elizabeth Hauss, vice-president; Glennis Elzey, secretary-treasurer. Social functions for the house include several dances, an annual Christmas dinner for poor children, and various parties.

Greek Letter Expansion

The past year has marked a red-letter period in the expansion of the Greek letter organizations of the campus of Indiana University as well as in the University itself. Almost one-half of the organizations already either have a new house, a much larger one, or are at work on a new one, to be occupied next year. Fraternities and sororities have added impetus to the movement for the Greater Indiana, at least as far as brick, stone and mortar are concerned.

First among the mighty move of growth comes the new half million dollar quadrangle, now in the process of construction on Jordan Avenue between East Third and East Tenth streets. Here five organizations plan to be housed in new homes when school opens next fall. The five groups are Delta Chi, Sigma Alpha Epsilon, Delta Gamma, Theta Chi, and Phi Mu. Two other groups, Phi Omega Pi and Chi Omega, may join in the quadrangle project.

Closely allied with the quadrangle construction is the building of the Kappa Sigma and Beta Theta Pi houses near the project. The Kappa Sigma house is far out on East Third street, and the Beta house on East Tenth street. Plans call for the completion of both houses by fall.

Three organizations, Alpha Tau Omega, Kappa Kappa Gamma, and Delta Upsilon, are living their first year in beautiful new homes. All three were built as the result of disastrous fires within the past few years. They are located on East Third street. During the past year, Lambda Chi Alpha has completed a large new home on East Third street and are now living in it. In all houses mentioned so far, various types of architecture have been used, and all have been built of stone.

Other organizations who have improved or who have new houses are Delta Tau Delta, Sigma Chi and Sigma Pi. Both Delta Tau Delta and Sigma Pi have purchased new homes, Sigma Pi buying the Kappa Sigma house on East Third, and Delta Tau Delta buying Dr. J. E. P. Holland's home on East Eighth. Sigma Chi, during the past summer, built a large addition to their home on East Seventh street.

Other notes of the Greek expansion are the granting of a chapter of Kappa Delta Rho, national social fraternity to Sigma Eta Chi, and the establishment of a house of Sigma Alpha Mu. In the sororities, a charter of Alpha Delta Pi has been granted Kappa Tau, and Beta Sigma Omicron has granted a charter to Sigma Delta.

ATHLETICS AND ART

And here is Hoagland Carmichael, Indiana's little satyr. Hoagland is the originator of the much whistled "Jew Boy Blues." You can tell quite easily from this little snap where the idea originated. This is art, too.

And here is Bab Winters, one of the little athletes of Lambda Chi Alpha. The dumb expression that has flitted across his features is indicative of tense anticipation for the game to start. The number of athletes that the Lambda Chis possess has ceased to be a joke, and has become a problem. This is athletics.

And this is Myron Paige, the little Beta freshman, one of Jack Winston's harem. Myron is a good little boy and is connected with the Y. M. C. A. He is sleeping here, but that may be due to the foggy atmosphere in which he has to live. We do not know whether this is art or otherwise.

This is Henry, the son of the Dean. Henry is the perfect lover of Indiana, as any Tri-Delt or Delta Zeta will tell you. Yes, they will. We do not know what Henry is doing here to cause the strained expression of the face, but we imagine that it is athletics. One of the Plungers helped plunge Henry into a vacation of three weeks.

Ivan Boxell—even the name is grotesque and makes you think of art, doesn't it? From all appearances Ivan has either just been sick, or he is just about to be sick. Anyway, he has a death grip on the apple of Adam, as if he expected to squeeze some cider out of it.

Now here, my children, is little Al Ringer, the cherub-faced Sigma Nu, with the mustache. Little Al is very obliging and is helping the girls put over their County Fair, just fair. He is supposed to look funny in this outfit, but he appears just about as usual. This is art.

Good Luck to You!

And turning to this cage, ... we have . . . .

I'm Jack, the $50,000 girl of the Pi Phis, but that's before Christmas prices, boys, so don't get injured in the rush. Here! Hear! $50,000 for this lady, gentlemen.

I'm Marian Hurd, another Pi Phi. There are so many deep things that I just love to talk about—you know, I'm so philosophical.

And I—I am Myra. You know me, beloved of the men who really count, don't you know? Some of them don't know it until a long time afterward, but they were mine. I appreciate them a little more since I made that visit to Ohio State.

I am Derexa Pentreath from up on North Ninth street in Clinton. I'm just a cute little knock-kneed rascal, that's what I am.

I'm Ellen McGranahan, the president of W. A. A. I'm pretty and athletic. Yes, I'm athletic. There are only two kinds of girls down here—those that don't matter and Phi Mus. And if a girl doesn't go Phi Mu, why, there's something lacking in her, and I wouldn't care to know her.

Dissertation on Campus Etiquette

On account of the many and diversified modes of conduct about the University, it has been deemed advisable by the Deans and the Aeons in conference with the Arbutus Board that a standard method of performance be adopted by all members of the institution, and by all those who strive to be members. The most important feature of the program concerns conduct of individuals on social engagements.

To begin with, there are nine different ways of conducting one's self at a sorority, eight of which will necessitate a conference with the Dean of Men on the following morning. At this conference the individual will be informed by the Dean that the 12:47 Monon leaves at 12:47, and that it proceeds to other parts shortly after the time of departure. (No. 1.)

Now to turn to the one acceptable mode of procedure, the individual first practices the various methods of introduction. In order to secure practice in shaking hands with the various sisters, the candidate should tie a wet wash-rag to a door knob and shake it enthusiastically at intervals. When practicing for the introduction with the chaperone, the desired results may be obtained by shaking hands with any of the big football athletes about the place.

In order that the candidate may better press his suit with the lady in question, it is advised that he take a moment of his time for preparation and press his suit. (No. 2.) This makes it appear that he has gone to very great pains to make himself most presentable on such a pressing occasion.

If the hour of the engagement has been set for 8:00 o'clock, the candidate should appear at the house of his lady about 10:30. Then if he has lived a clean life, and has a naturally rugged constitution, he may expect to be greeted by his lady about one hour later. In the meantime he may amuse himself by hiding at the foot of the stairs and tripping the sisters as they descend. This always goes over very well, and almost without exception the entire sisterhood falls for the individual in question. If this method fails to bring the desired results, the candidate should try jerking the chairs from beneath the various sisters as they are about to recline upon them. Invariably this causes the sisters to fall gracefully to the floor, so that they may gaze up at the hero with infinite admiration oozing from their eyes.

Now that the candidate has mastered the sisterhood, he is ready to greet his lady. As she descends, he should waltz over to her and slap her manfully on the back, under the assumption that she is choking with joy at sight of him. After the preliminary rounds are over, the couple should indulge in several forbidden dance steps in front of the chaperone. This always creates an impression of independence, and leaves the idea that the individual has the courage of his convictions.

When the date is well under way, the couple should skip down the street to the Book Nook. By going to the Book Nook, everyone knows that the couple are somehow different, and that they will bear watching in the future. As the individual enters the door, he should wave grandly at the assembled multitude. As the first booth is reached, he should look in and shout, "Hi, ol' fellow; how 'bout that?" For the second booth he may say, "Hello, you old crook; whatcha up to?" As number three is reached, " 'Lo, Jane; how's my old girl?" Next he may yell, "Hi, Politician; Hotch out!" And so on with each booth in order that the girl will know that she must have an awfully popular fellow along, one that knows everybody. If any athletes are sitting in any of the booths, it is always well to stop and ask them confidentially, "Who's the coach goin' to play tonight?" The students all worship the athletes, and if the individual is on speaking terms with any of them, that fact puts him right up in the money. (No. 3.)

Finally the couple reach the back booth where they retire for a time. When the waiter approaches, the individual should greet him fervently, as if they belonged to the same lodge of Eagles back home. After the eating is over and the candidate has had sufficient time to impress the lady of his knowledge of campus affairs, there arises the inevitable problem of getting out of paying the bill. There are two ways of doing this. The individual may tell the girl to close her eyes and count ten, and while she is doing this he may grab his hat and walk hurriedly out of the place. A more effective way, however, is to grab the girl by the neck and choke her into unconsciousness. (No. 4.) About half of the inmates of the Book Nook will just think that another necking party is in progress, and the other half will run out after the undertaker. While they are doing this, the individual may arise calmly and walk backward to the rear wall and saw out a hole big enough for him to crawl through. When he is once outside, he may proceed homeward at a leisurely pace, content in the knowledge that he has spent a very successful evening.

LIGHT LINES AND JEERS

After the fashion, but we trust not in imitation, of The Indiana Daily Student, we feel compelled to dedicate a portion of this publication to the editorial policy to which we shall adhere.

In connection with this, we wish to thank Mr. Paul Thompson, the editor of The Indiana Daily Student, for the fact that he does not try to write editorials. We are tortured enough as it is. And we wish that The Indiana Daily Student will never have a dearth of editorials to print, for in that case, Mr. G. Dallas Newton might feel called upon to attempt one.

Having stated our problem, we base our platform on LIGHT LINES AND JEERS.

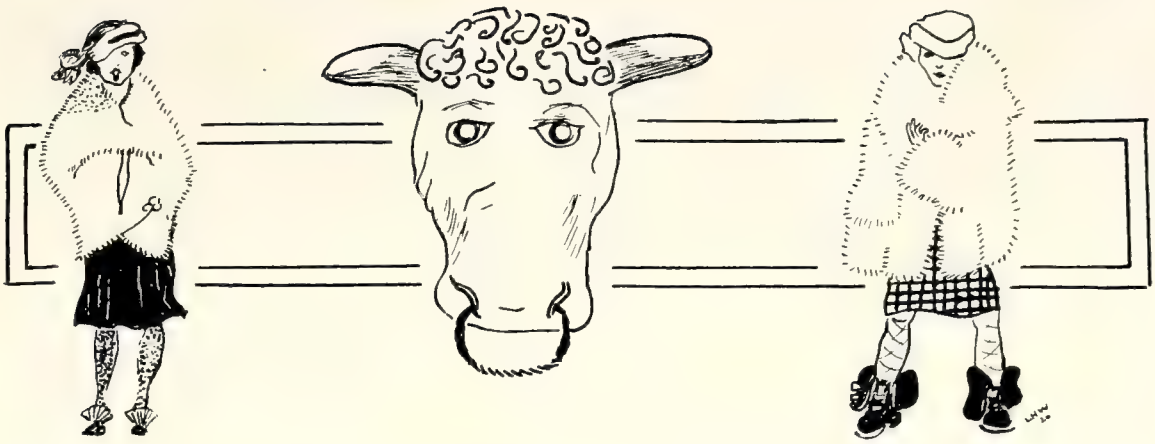

In keeping with our editorial policy, we shall proceed to the society notes.

Kappa Kappa Gamma, having been elected Prom Queen, wishes to announce that the organization will hold little or no spring dance, on account of the fact that Prom tickets are still priced at $5.00. The pledging of William Bray and John Ellis will be announced soon.

Sigma Kappa announces that the light on their side porch is permanently out of order, and that this fact offers infinite possibilities.

Phi Kappa Psi announces the pledging of Walter Peterson, '39, and Merle Clay, Sp. It is felt that the pledging of these two men will add great strength to chapter, especially in the matter of urging actives to remain in school for the full four years.

At the recent election held for holders of Book Nook booths, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Brosman were unanimously elected to the position of All-Campus chaperones. It is said that Mr. and Mrs. Brosman (nee, Miss Kate Lewis) are very satisfactory to the deans because of their enigmatical attitude at student dances, keeping their charges in the dark most of the time.

THE BISON

Go west, young man, go west—
In the west abound the buffaloes.

JAMES HONAN
Noted hunter

In keeping with its pioneer origin, Indiana University has revived the buffalo hunt. Throughout the length and breadth of the campus, the sturdy hunters stalk the elusive little animals. Among the shrubs and the trees, at the call of the fitful breezes the hunt continues. With the coming of winter, the search grew increasingly difficult, but winter rules were applied very successfully, and many of the wild things were dragged from out of their cover. But with the return of spring, the animals abound again, whole herds of them, peeping shyly and unsuspectingly forth from their hiding places.

The most successful hunters have learned that the most likely hunting grounds are small elevations and the steppes of Indiana. But sometimes the game wanders even into the classrooms to cause great commotion among students and faculty. Every organization is grooming its most capable hunters and sending them forth to the Book Nook to win their first hunting honors. And all the organizations of maidens are making careful selection of the most beautiful of the buffalo species available and preparing them accordingly.

After a long and careful search by the experts of the ARBUTUS, the most representative group of bisons has been selected for the All-Western team to compete with the selections of other institutions and districts. The committee has placed in our hands the following report, which confirms our dirtiest suspicions.

THE AWAKENING OF SUFFRAGE AT
INDIANA UNIVERSITY

In the momentous year of 1920, there came about the emancipation of women at Indiana University. A band of sturdy and determined little coeds under the benevolent guidance of Dean Agnes E. Wells met and decided that a decent respect for the opinions of mankind required that they declare the causes which impelled them to the separation. After declaring the causes, they broke away forever from the political domination of campus mankind. Their purpose is to regulate all matters pertaining to the student life of the members which do not fall under the jurisdiction of the faculty. Consequently they have nothing to do.

They help enforce the law. However, the members of the Council are so constituted that they would not be tempted to break any rules anyway. The rulers of the organization have it within their power to appoint who shall pour the tea at the friendship parties that the organization sponsors for greater unity and strength among the disorganized women of the campus. As a side issue they strive to promote and maintain the highest standards of University life. They have been remarkably successful at promoting, but the higher the standards the better the high jumpers that have been produced. In the long run, then, the organization has co-operated very well with W. A. A.

The biggest thing that they have ever produced was a grand piano which serves as a beautiful ornament for the West Parlors of the Student Building. Fortunately, along with the piano, a piano bench was secured that furnishes seating arrangements for another couple at Student Building dances.

It is admitted that the organization furnishes a democratic form of government, although the extent of the government has never been defined. Every University woman is a member ipso facto, that is, a lot of them cannot help themselves. The organization has, however, furnished a number of incentives, and boosts Indiana University, which, after all, should be the purpose of every organization.

THE GRAND FINALE

"Now, when you go home this summer, will you be good girls? Will you be true, loyal Indiana girls? Will you be Dean Wells' girls?"

After careful consideration, the Student Repairs Committee has decided that C. Lenox Beshore and James Barnhill have more of that appeal than any other two men on the campus.

Miss Anastasia Gullion is the one on the right

Mr. William Miller and Mr. Robert Zaiser are considering offers from Leland Stanford University, as members of the swimming squad. It is said that they intend to paint the towns red out there, but that they plan to use water colors.

One of the new organizations sponsored by Dean Wells and W. S. G. A. is the Order of Morons for Women. Dean Wells asks that they put moron before they appear in public. Among the charter members are Dorothy See, Jane Ensle, Frances Brackett and Dorothy Parrett.

Mr. William Kenney seated on the horse

And now we are come to the song of the swan, the end. No doubt there are a number of people who belong here whom we have not seen. Some of them we never could see. We have felt that every man had his price. Some of them we have rated right well. Before we consider our share done, we shall venture a number of stock prices, and formally open and dedicate the Exchange.

THE FITNESS OF THINGS

YOU KNOW full well that the victories of your Alma Mater on the field of athletics have been possible only because of the fitness of your teams.

This involved the right kind of men, thorough schooling of these men by competent coaches, proper physical training, and the best possible equipment.

In your college studies you have received from competent teachers that mental coaching which will fit you for the great contest of life.

The results of your dental training in the practice of your profession will depend much on the excellence of your mechanical equipment.

Superior workmanship requires and demands superior tools and materials. No competent artisan will waste his time and energy on inferior equipment. Much more essential is it that the dentist, whose profession has to do with the healing art, be properly equipped.

Since 1844 The House of White has studied the needs of the dental profession. Our aim has been and always will be to aid in the betterment of dentistry by supplying only the best in dental supplies and equipment for the profession.

You are assured when using a product bearing the Trade SS Mark that you are employing the best, and that you are equipped to win.

THE 1926 ARBUTUS is done. The staff has dynamited the office and gone on an orgy of a year's rest and slumber. Typewriters have been thrown to the winds, desks dismantled and fed to grotesque fears and hallucinations. Records and files have been burned in a hideous jubilee.

The 1926 ARBUTUS is done. We are now convinced of the truth of that poignant line from Shakespeare, "There are in these United States three kinds of people: those that are born crazy, those that achieve craziness, and those that—edit year books."

JOE GARNIER,
Editor.
